ALIGNMENT OF POWERS

France Favorable to Position Which Has Been Taken by Russia.

GERMANY IS OPPOSED TO IT

Two Important Communications Bearing on Chinese Negotiations Another Note by United States.

Washington, Sept. 6.—The latest expression as to the attitude of the powers on the evacuation of Peking comes from the United States ambassador at Paris, General Horace Porter, who has advised the authorities here that the attitude of the French government is favorable to the position taken by Russia.

Almost simultaneously with this dispatch from General Porter came another from the American charge d'affaires at Berlin, giving the attitude of Germany on Russia's proposal. This in substance states that Germany, while anxious to avoid any friction between the powers, regards the conditions at Peking such as to require the continued presence of German forces there. Neither General Porter nor Mr. Jackson gives the text of the answers but only the substance of the position taken by the two governments.

The Alignment Indicated.

These two highly important communications bring the Chinese negotiations to a very advanced state, though they are not yet concluded, as all of the answers are not yet in. The German and French answers, however, clearly indicate the alignment of the powers. It is generally accepted that Germany's attitude in favor of remaining at Peking will be concurred in by Italy and Austria, as these two countries act with Germany on all questions of a political nature. Moreover, definite word has been received here which clearly foreshadows Austria's position in favor of remaining at Peking.

As to the purpose of Great Britain, there is an absolute lack of official information, though little doubt is entertained that since Germany has taken the initiative Great Britain will follow suit in favor of remaining at Peking. The position of Japan likewise is lacking in definiteness, although it is believed in the best informed quarters that if other nations remain at Peking Japan will deem it expedient to remain there also.

It would seem from this that France is the only government to give concurrence to the Russian proposition, although the United States has expressed a purpose of following Russia's course unless the other powers brought about a modification of Russia's position. Thus far Russia has not expressed any purpose of modifying her original position. It was stated authoritively today that Russia has not ordered the departure of her minister or troops from Peking up to this time, so far as the United States government is advised. It is stated also that no new propositions have been presented, but that the question is practically the same as when first presented, namely as to whether the troops will remain or be withdrawn.

Preparing Another Note.

The receipt of the communications from Berlin and Paris brought about numerous conferences between the president, Secretary Root and Acting Secretary of State Hill, and also between Mr. Hill and Mr. Adee. It was gathered from these meetings that another note was being prepared by the United States, but the authorities did not feel disposed to give any inkling as to its nature and it is quite probable that the final form will await the consideration of the cabinet tomorrow.

The military situation at Peking remains unchanged apparently. General Chaffee's messages makes it clear that he is proceeding on the understanding that the American troops are to remain in China and he and General Barry speak of the comfortable arrangements that have been made for the soldiers.

MISUNDERSTANDING OF ROCKHILL AND INTERVIEWER

Washington, Sept. 6.—The state department this afternoon issued the following:

"A cablegram has been received from Mr. W. W. Rockhill dated at Shanghai Sept. 5 in which he authorizes the department to deny emphatically and categorically the statements made in certain newspapers relating to an interview alleged to have been given by him. The only interview he has ever given related strictly to the circular of July 3. He states that no merchant vessel will be sailing from Shang-hai for several days."

The Associated Press interview with Mr. Rockhill dated Shang-hai, Sept. 2, was sent from Shang-hai by cable after having been carefully prepared by a trusted staff correspondent of the Associated Press at present at Shang-hai. Shang-hai, Sept. 6.—William W. Rockhill, United States special commissioner in China, when questioned today regarding his denial of statements made by him to a correspondent of the Associated Press and cabled to the United States from Shang-hai last Sunday said the state department had cabled him regarding the interview and, as he considered the conversation personal, he had felt justified in replying that he had given no interview.

The correspondent of the Associated Press on the occasion in question visited Mr. Rockhill as a correspondent and for the purpose of inquiring whether, in Mr. Rockhill's opinion, Russia would withdraw from Peking.

As Mr. Rockhill did not request the correspondent to refrain from publishing his views as expressed during the conversation the correspondent thought he desired to have them made known.

MINNESOTA FUSIONISTS HAVE NOMINATED LIND

Party Was Held in Minneapolis. Nearly Every One of the 1,140 Delegates Was in the Hall.

St. Paul, Sept. 6.—The war effected between the Minnesota Democrats and Populists today and a full ticket was named, headed by Governor John Lind. An electoral ticket was also indorsed by the two conventions. The Democrats then their convention in full city and the Populists in Minneapolis.

Following is the fusion ticket:

Governor—John Lind.
Lieutenant governor—T. J. Meaghan.
Secretary of state—M. E. Neary.
State treasurer—H. C. Koerner.
Attorney general—Robert C. Saunders.
Railroad commissioners—F. M. Rinaldini and T. J. Knox for four years, J. M. Owen for two years.
Chief justice—J. C. Nodaway.
Electors at large—H. Rudolph Schiffman and M. B. Pendergast.

The Democratic convention was one of the most enthusiastic gatherings of the party ever held in Minnesota. Nearly every one of the 1,140 delegates was in his seat. The nomination of Lind was made by acclamation with a roar and wave of hats, umbrellas and coats.

The platform renews allegiance to the national Democracy and its principles; rejoices in the nomination of Bryan and Stevenson; condemns the Puerto Rican tariff; extends sympathy to the Boer republics in South Africa and condemns the Republicans for not expressing sympathy with them; condemns the high protective tariff as productive of trusts, approves the efforts of organized labor for a shorter working day, very strongly indorses the administration of Governor Lind in all particulars and demands that the gross earning tax on railroads be increased to 4 per cent.

The ticket was ratified tonight by a mass meeting of the two conventions, addressed by Governor Lind.

MAUPIN MEN CONTROLLED TELLER COUNTY DEMOCRATS

Special to the Gazette.

Cripple Creek, Sep. 6.—The Democratic county convention met in this city today and elected forty-seven delegates to the state, judicial, congressional, senatorial and legislative conventions. A different set of delegates was selected for the three conventions first named, but the same set of delegates will attend the senatorial and legislative conventions.

The proceedings from beginning to end were in favor of the faction which favored Maupin for governor and J. Maurice Finn for congressman. Of the 194 delegates present, 110 represented the Maupin faction, the other eighty comprising the Stimson faction. The greater part of the day was consumed in effecting a permanent organization, the real business of the convention having been done tonight.

The resolutions were quite brief. They endorsed the principles of the Chicago platform and the national platform adopted at Kansas City. They point with pride and satisfaction to the manner in which the official affairs in Teller county have been conducted, congratulate the people of this county on the reduction of taxes since the formation of the county as compared with the high taxes when this was a part of El Paso county, and congratulate the people of the country on self government as annunciated by the Declaration of Independence. The resolutions declare for direct legislation. They also instruct the delegation to the state convention to oppose the seating of all contesting delegations and instruct the delegates to the judicial convention to oppose the candidacy of any one inimical to organized labor.

A specific resolution offered by the miners union was later adopted, condemning Judge Goddard for declaring the eight hour law unconstitutional and pledging the delegates to the judicial convention to endeavor to secure the nomination of Gallinger of Pueblo for judge of the supreme court.

An Indian Boy's Trick.

Some good stories of an officer's son, brought up by his father at a frontier post, are told by Mrs. E. B. Custer in the September St. Nicholas. The Kid, as he was called, was no match for these little Bedouins in riding, but he entered into everything with such fervor he sometimes won from mere audacity. A race was suggested by the nimble fingertalk of his playmates; but when he began to unfasten the surcingle and to "cinch" Samanthy more securely, they rushed whooping around him, pointing meaningly to the bare backs of their own ponies. Off came the saddle and bridle, and in Samanthy's aristocratic mouth was thrust a rope to guide him. The Kid, thanks to his early training, could stick like a burr to the round, smooth back. The Indian boys were rarely allowed any but the slow pack ponies for play, and Alf won twice. The third contestant (for he had to match himself against each one), made signs to change ponies; and here the trickiness of the Indian crept in, for to the Kid was given a racer he had never seen, an animal which was also a vixen. The little group surrounded him as he leaped to his place. He was rosy with excitement, his eyes dancing with the fun of it all. The sinewy, bronze bodies of the Indian boys were moist with sweat and glistened in the sun, and their eager, brilliant eyes and graceful motions and gesture exhibited impatience for the start. The ponies were equally impatient to be off.

The braves were either leaning against their tutelors or squatted near the tepees, where no move of the miles could escape their vigilant eyes. While the squaws noted a short time from their hard tasks to watch the favorite diversion of the red man.

At the signal, away bounded the contestants, amid the yells and skirmishings of the savages. Samanthy's short canter left him far behind this fleetest of the herd belonging to the scouts, and the Kid shouted back exultantly. But before the sound died on the still summer air the fleetfoolishness of the pony developed. He came to a sudden stop, reared in an instant unseated Alf, and, looking back, the whites of his eyes showing viciously, he shot his small hoof squarely against the boy's head. For a moment the blue sky above Alf was full of stars, then came the blackness of night. The small hands fell lifeless at his sides, and the pallor of death settled in the poor little Kid's upturned face.

VERMONT RETURNS

White River Junction, Vt., Sept. 6.—The election returns for Vermont are all in. A careful scrutiny of the county returns based on official returns in all but a few towns and in these the unofficial figures are being used, show that Stickney (Rep.), for governor, has a plurality of 46,[illegible], and a majority over all of 30,[illegible].

The complete revised returns give these results:

For governor, Stickney (Rep.), 46,400; Senter (Dem.), 16,948; all others, 1,276.

The Republican plurality this year exceeds by 2,491 the average of the last three presidential years and by 588 the average for the six last election years.

Philadelphia, Sept. 6.—The home team indulged in a batting matinee today and made everything in the hit line, from a scratching bunt to a clean home run. GOLD DEMOCRATS

National Committee Chairman Tracey Will Conduct a Campaign Against Bryan.

Indianapolis, Ind., Sept. 6.—Charles Tracey of New York, chairman of the national committee of the gold Democratic party and John P. Fresnot of this city, secretary of the national committee, held a conference today. Mr. Fresnot, secretary of the committee, announced that national headquarters will be opened in this city at once. The purpose of the establishment of national headquarters as announced by Mr. Tracey is to conduct a campaign through the country, especially in this state which will endeavor to defeat Mr. Bryan.

Mr. Tracey said:

"Judging from my observation and knowledge my opinion is that 75 per cent of the Gold Democrats of 1896 will vote for McKinley and Roosevelt. The remaining 25 per cent will vote for Mr. Bryan."

TREMENDOUS ENTHUSIASM

Greeted Theodore Roosevelt at First Meeting of Western Tour.

HIS AUDITORS ROSE EN MASSE

His Speech at Detroit Dealt With the Kansas City Platform, Militarism and Imperialism.

Detroit, Mich., Sept. 6.—The first meeting of Gov. Roosevelt's western tour, which was held in the big armory room of the Detroit Light Guard armory tonight, was all that the governor's ardent partisans could have desired in point of attendance and enthusiasm. The floor and galleries of the great hall were crowded. Many were on the outside, unable to obtain seats or standing room within hearing distance.

The vice presidential candidate received a tremendously enthusiastic greeting as he made his way through the of the side aisles. A large proportion of the audience stood upon chairs and yelled frantically for "Teddy." It was with difficulty that the shouts could be appeased and silence restored so as to permit the meeting to proceed.

When Gov. Roosevelt arose to speak the great crowd arose almost en masse and remained standing and shouting for some time. The governor's speech occupied about an hour in delivery and was listened to throughout with thoughtful attention.

An Object Lesson.

Gov. Roosevelt gave the audience an object lesson when he asserted that our soldiers in the Philippines had less to fear from any body of armed bandits in that country than they had to fear from the principles of the Kansas City platform, and the success of the Democratic ticket. He said five members of the regular army were present and asked them to stand up that the audience might see their tyrants. Five soldiers from the Fourteenth infantry at Fort Wayne, who occupied a front box, when thus invited, rose and were applauded. "Now," exclaimed Gov. Roosevelt, "behind your tyrants." The audience shouted with laughter. "They are here," continued the governor, "five soldiers to four thousand people in this audience, which is a larger proportion of tyranny in this house than the percentage of the regular army bears to all whose number of people to the country."

ROOSEVELT'S SPEECH.

Gov. Roosevelt said in part:

"In this campaign the issue of overshadowing importance whether we shall continue or abandon the governmental policy, which has brought this country to the highest pitch of prosperity at home, and which has kept the national honor unstained both at home and abroad. To deliberately undo the work would be to dishonor the national reputation and to throw us into a disastrous industrial chaos.

"The Kansas City platform commits our opponents to a policy which means material disaster and moral disgrace; which means a violent panic in the business world, and therefore widespread and prolonged misery among all our people; which further means upsetting the courts, the violation of the nation's faith in financial matters, and the unworthy abandonment of our duty abroad. The nation that accepts such moral principles can not live. It will rot to death in the loathsome slow of its own corruption.

"If the American people are true to themselves they must in the most unequivocal manner repudiate the Populistic and communistic doctrines enunciated in the Kansas City platform, exactly as they repudiated them in '96. The existence of any considerable party which affirms and re-affirms these doctrines is in itself a serious menace to the nation's moral and material welfare and we have a right to appeal to every far-sighted and patriotic man whatever his political affiliations in the past, from no matter what section of the country he comes, to stand with us in this struggle for national integrity.

False Prophets Confounded.

"We have a right to insist upon both wisdom and sincerity in the leaders of any party who appeal for popular confidence. Now let us see if we can trust the wisdom of our present opponents, by comparing their prophecies in '96 with the actual events since."

Gov. Roosevelt quoted many extracts from Mr. Bryan's speeches in 1896, concerning the effects of the gold standard and asked his hearers to contrast actual results with Mr. Bryan's prophecies.

"In his speeches," continued Gov. Roosevelt, "Mr. Bryan kept insisting upon the alleged fact that money was growing dearer; that under a gold standard it was bound to continue to grow scarcer. Well, as a matter of fact, and thanks to our prosperity, there is more money in circulation per capita in the United States today than ever before in the history of the country. On July 1 last the circulation per capita was $26.80, an increase in circulation of $6.40 for every man, woman and child in the country, as compared with what it was on July 1, 1896. So Mr. Bryan's prophecy has been as wide of the mark in this instance as in every other. The present year is the first in which the two billion dollar mark in circulation has ever been passed. In other words, the increase of money in circulation has kept pace with the expanding industries and commerce of the country and this increase has been predominantly due to the condition of prosperity produced by the gold standard; yet Mr. Bryan in his Minneapolis speech of four years ago predicted that commerce would be at a standstill because gold would go out of the country and that the issuing of bonds would be necessary to bring it back. Every single prediction he has made has been falsified by the event.

"Our opponents are as cock sure about the gold dollar being a robber dollar four years ago as they are about what they are pleased to term militarism and imperialism at the present day, and their utterances mean no more now than they meant then.

"Mr. Bryan at the moment as was uncasily conscious that there is something very wrong with his proposed financial policy and talks very little about it, but he has definitely admitted himself to it and the various conventions that nominated him have reiterated their belief in all the absurd and exploded theories which he championed four years ago. Unless our opponents are guilty of the grossest hypocrisy, they must, if they carry the election, immediately start in to revolutionize our whole financial system and begin a series of experiments with our industrial well being, which could only result in the most widespread disaster.

Soldiers Most Dangerous Foe.

"It is a terrible and most lamentable truth that our soldiers who are now facing death in the Philippines are forced to recognize in the Bryantistic Democracy their most dangerous foe. The bullets that slay our men in Luzon are inspired by the denouncers of America here. No least general, not Aguinaldo himself, can do so much to prolong the fighting, can do so much to increase the bloodshed of American and Filipino alike, as has been done by the Kansas City convention.

"So far as I know there is no man in the United States who believes in either imperialism or militarism. They are pure phantoms of even more shadowy and intangible quality than the iniquitous "robber gold dollar" which disturbed Mr. Bryan so much four years ago.

"Just at present we have in the regular army, as compared with our population, nine-tenths of a soldier to every one thousand of population. The increase of militarism since the palmy days of Jefferson, a century back, is represented by exactly one-tenth of a soldier to every thousand inhabitants. All the increase to the danger of our institutions is measured, therefore, by the amount of tyranny which is capable of being exercised by one American in a uniform over 10,000 of his fellow citizens without uniforms.

Consent of the Governed.

"Mr. Bryan and his associates cannot say one word about the consent of the governed doctrine as applying to the Philippines. They dwell upon the fact that no man is good enough to govern another. In North Carolina and other southern states we see before our eyes the process of the disfranchisement of the negro. We see before our eyes the black man governed without his consent by the white man. Until our opponents have removed the beam from their own eye, by applying their consent of the governed doctrine at home, let them hold their peace about the Tagal bandits to whom their words give fresh heart to shoot down our soldiers in the far eastern archipelago.

"The policy of expansion is America's historic policy. We have annexed the Philippines exactly as we have annexed Hawaii, New Mexico and Alaska. They are now part of American territory and we have no more right to give them up than we have the right to restore Hawaii to the Kanaka queen or to abandon Alaska to the Esquimaux. There is not a particle of difference between the cases. We cannot go back, first, for the sake of the islands themselves, and next for the sake of our own honor.

"The men who are making speeches on the unrighteousness of our expanding in the Philippines might with as much justification incite the Sioux and the Apache tribes to outbreak against us on the ground that we have no right to retain South Dakota or Arizona.

"The policy of the Kansas City platform is a policy of economic disaster and financial dishonor at home and of unworthy shrinking from duty abroad, and we appeal to all honest, far-seeing, brave and patriotic men, north or south, east or west, whatever their political affiliations may have been in the past, to stand with us now against the men who would bring such abuse and misery upon our country and to support us in upholding the cause of honesty and of industrial well-being at home and the honor of the American flag in the face of all the peoples of the earth."

GRACE-PARKER FIGHT

Failed to Come Off Owing to Inability of Management to Put Up Hard Cash.

Special to the Gazette.

Pueblo, Sept. 6.—Owing to a disagreement with the management, Kid Parker and Jack Grace, who were to have fought at the Lake pavilion, failed to come together. The two boxers demanded that the money be put up in cash, but this the management was unable to do. In order not to disappoint the crowd Grace and Parker boxed four exhibition rounds. A brisk preliminary between Ed Seamon and Tom McIntyre resulted in a decision for Seamon. A battle royal between six husky negro steel workers closed the entertainment.

The business office of the Gazette for the Cripple Creek district is at the Collins hotel, Cripple Creek. All orders for subscriptions to be delivered by carrier at 6:30 a. m. daily may be addressed to G. B. MacEachern, agent, and complaints of irregular or late delivery reported to the same address.

Cripple Creek, Sept. 6. The Republicans held a large and enthusiastic meeting tonight in the city hall which was addressed by John W. Shearer, a well known attorney of Colorado Springs, and Colonel Blakeley, a Republican well known throughout the state. They each made an excellent speech on the leading issues of the day and were enthusiastically received by the large audience.

Lee Darling died at 11 o'clock this morning at the home of his mother, Mrs. G. C. Leighton, 107 West Walnut avenue. The cause of death was the breaking of a blood vessel in his head, the blood congested on the brain and causing temporary insanity during his last days. The deceased was one of the best known and popular newspaper men in the district, was 32 years of age and has resided here for nine years. He was a member of the local Typographical union under the auspices of which the funeral will be held tomorrow afternoon at 2 o'clock at Lampman's undertaking rooms. The services will be conducted by Rev. Mr. Tate. The remains will be taken to Cheyenne, Wyo., for burial.

Benjamin A. Baker, aged 32, died of typhoid fever at the Sisters hospital this morning after a lingering illness. The funeral was held tonight at White's undertaking parlors under the auspices of the Knights of Maccabees, of which order he was a member. The father, J. A. Baker, who has been here at his son's bedside for four weeks, will accompany the remains tomorrow to his home at Keen's Station, New York.

W. J. Cameron and Herman Sigel were in police court tonight on charge of disturbance. Cameron is a grown man and Sigel is a boy. Officer Scott found them today at the corner of Second street and Bennett avenue where Cameron had the boy by the throat. Cameron explained to the court that the boy threw a stone which came near striking him on the head, that he then threw a brick taking effect on his leg and afterwards threw another stone. Sigel claims that Cameron and another man were walking behind his father's home. Mrs. Sigel also, though not placed on the witness stand said that Cameron was in the habit of throwing stones at her boy and that he is jealous because they have a wagon and he has not. Each one of the parties was fined $5 and costs.

Lake Theater at the Fair.

"Theaters, Panoramas, and Other Spectacles," are the subject of the second of Jean Schopfer's papers on "Amusements at the Paris Exposition," which appears in the September Century.

"The midsummer poets have come down from the hill of Montmartre to the Rue de Paris, where may be found the Theatre des Auxiliaries Girls, the Grand Guignol, the Maison du Rire, and the Bruyelle. At these theaters short pieces are played, and political songs are sung that make fun of the government, whatever it may be, for clever minds are always to be found on the opposing side. Once act plays by modern authors are given, and also some reproductions of old plays from the repertoire of the Theatre de la Foire. These performances are all better suited to Frenchmen than to foreigners. At the time of my visit I took with me a friend from New England, but I saw that the players were incomprehensible to him. They wore their hearts in their sleeves, so to speak; life for them was merely outward and informal. So, Miss Wilkins' somber heroes, who prefer to be unhappy and to make miserable those who love them rather than change their minds about anything they have once decided upon, or which they consider duty, would be incomprehensible to those French players. I fear that the theaters of the Rue de Paris will scarcely be appreciated by the Anglo-Saxon audiences, with the exception, perhaps, of certain learned university professors who are said to still enjoy the broadly comic parts of Shakespeare.

How a Horse Kills a Snake.

Few of us have ever seen a horse kill a snake, but Mrs. Custer describes the performance in her story of "The Kid," in the September St. Nicholas:

"As they were pushing out of a jungle on foot one day, the colonel said: 'Samanthy is a little too attentive. Alf he shoves himself alongside of me, and when I remonstrate he backs a little, but keeps so close he almost treads on my heels.'

"'Well, father, I suppose he thinks nothing can go on without him. He's been in everything I ever did yet.'

"As they came to a narrow defile, with the branches of the trees festooned with moss and the ground tangled with vines and thick underbrush, Samanthy forgot his manners and crowded to the front. There was hardly room for two abreast. The colonel, peering into the thicket for birds, heard what he took to be the whirr of pheasants' wings, and he lifted his gun to take aim. The Kid, pressing on, saw with his keen eyes that it was nothing so harmless as the rising of a covey of birds. A huge rattlesnake, overlooked by the colonel in his intense concentration on the thicket, lay coiled directly in front of him, the vicious mouth hissing, the eyes gleaming with fire. Alf was in danger. He could not fire, for the father or the pony would have received the shot, as they were placed.

"But a more vigilant eye than even the Kid's had seen the danger. The Kid, with a spring in front of the colonel, and with the nicest exactitude, down came the pony with a buck jump, his hoofs close together on the head of the snake, crushing in the deadly fangs, and flattening the skull into the soft soil.

"Still there was an ominous rattle of the tail, and the little nag gathered himself again, bowed his supple back, and drove his hoofs into the hatted skin of the deadly foe of mankind.

CALIFORNIA REPUBLICANS.

Strong Indorsement of the National Party and Ticket.

ARAPAHOE DEMOCRATS

Maloneyites Are Now Credited With Majority of Delegates.

COMMITTEE DID NOT REPORT

Sensational Statement by O'Donnell Thomas Ballots In Distinct Violation of Agreement.

Special to the Gazette.

Denver, Sept. 6.—The Democratic peace committee has been in executive session all day and will not complete their work before morning.

The members of the committee will not give out returns so far canvassed for publication, but enough has been learned to know that the Maloneyites have a majority of the delegates, and that the Thomas faction has been losing as the count proceeded. In one ward where the Thomas people claimed 8 out of 10 precincts, they should have been credited to be Maloneyites, and in many other cases the same mistake was made. The peace committee will not consider the cases of the contested delegations but will leave them for the convention proper.

Both sides still claim a majority of the delegates, but Mr. Maloney says that as the regular organization carried the primaries, they are entitled to and will organize the convention.

The impression is gaining ground that when Chairman Maloney calls the convention together in the morning and the Thomasites realize that they have lost, they will bolt and hold another convention. One of Governor Thomas' chief supporters who does not wish to be named said tonight: "If we are not given a majority of the delegates by the peace committee we will withdraw and hold another convention, thereby carrying the fight into the state convention."

Asked if it is true that the Thomas committee of six members had decided to name the temporary organization, Chairman Maloney to call the convention and name the temporary organization.

T. J. O'Donnell, member of the peace committee, tonight made the following statement:

"In my opinion, the ticket printed by the Thomas faction was a fraud, in spirit, without and a violation of the peace agreement. Ballots were held.

"The purpose and plain intent of article 7 of the agreement entered into by the five members of this committee is that the ticket to be voted at the primary election should not be distinguishable from the other tickets that are held in the hands of the voters, as related to the paper. The tickets of the regular organization were printed in exact conformance with the agreement. They were on white unsized paper, and have no distinguishing or distinguishing mark of any kind upon them except the name or designation of the ticket. "Regular Democratic." The Thomas ticket was on "print" paper, nearly straw color, and far from white, that they are as much distinguishable from the regular tickets as if they were black, yellow, red or blue. I took occasion to observe carefully during the progress of the primary election, and no one with eyes could be deceived as to which ticket was in the hands of a voter or person holding packages of ballots for the purpose of distribution.

"I also observed that when the Thomas ticket was folded, the union label showed through the paper and marked the ticket as certainly as would a stripe along or across the back of it. The difference in color plainly distinguished them even at a distance. Therefore it appears to me that that portion of the agreement in relation to uniformity in the size, color and printing of the ticket intended primarily to protect the voter from coercion of the police force and other governmental agencies, was set at naught by the printing of this ticket, and that the protection which it was designed to throw around the primary election, wholly failed.

"I protested against this ticket as soon as I discovered its character, and the distinguishing mark which it printed upon it, entering my protest at 11 o'clock on the day of the primary when there was still time to have printed the ticket in conformity with the agreement, and it was advised by Judge [illegible] that the ticket should be moved.

"While believing that the Thomas ticket fulfilled a technical [illegible] its direction, for it was a violation of the agreement they were held. I [illegible] in obedience to the agreement, if [illegible] that the ticket [illegible] the will of the people."

INDICATOR PROPERTY

A Strike Which Shows Excellent Values—Prospect is Promising for 100 Ton Shipment.

Special to the Gazette.

Cripple Creek, Sept. 6.—A strike was made on the Indicator property from which there have been two assays made. The vein is exceptional in width. Samples taken from across the three feet showed a value of $71.60. A sample of red talc of which there are streaks clear through the vein gave a value of $256. These were taken from the bottom of the shaft which was 17 feet in depth. Sinking will be continued to a depth of 100 feet.

Another shipment of 5 or 6 tons will be sent out next week from the Monte Cristo, of the Indicator company on Tenderfoot hill. A mill run of 50 pounds taken last Sunday from the shaft which is 50 feet down showed a value of $24.

Pharmacist.

There are about 100 men in the ore house of the Maine Mining company, operating the Pharmacist. A shipment of about 100 tons will be sent out next week. Some of the ore shows sylvanite and free gold. Samples on the ore already sorted show a value of over 5 ounces. The 100 foot lift is nearly completed in the Jones shaft.

The Maine Mining company on the Pharmacist has made connection with the workings of the Brady and Champion lease of the Burns at the 550-foot level and is working the same ore shoot with good results.

Hull City Placer.

The King and Whiting lease on the Hull City Placer will make a shipment of thirty tons of $80 ore tomorrow and have ten tons of sacked ore worth about $400 to the ton which will be sent out in a few days.

O'Hara and Sidebottom, sub-lessees of King and Whiting, on the Hull City Placer sent out a shipment of two carloads of $60 ore the first of the week.

May and Hopkins, operating on the Six Points, made a shipment yesterday of 340 tons of $60 ore. The stope at a depth of 320 feet is open nearly 50 feet and shows almost two feet of good ore.

Holbrook and Williams, leasing on the east end of the Trail property, are crosscutting at a depth of 100 feet to find the vein opened in a surface shaft which contained high grade value. They expect to reach it within 50 feet.

Legal Tender.

The Legal Tender started the work of sinking this week. The shaft will be put down an additional 100 feet before work will commence on the vein deposit. The work is expected to occupy thirty days.

The production of the Independence for last month was 44 carloads of cyanide ore and 7 carloads of smelting grade smelting ore.

The Woods Investment Co., operating the Deadwood, has found within two feet of ore worth from $150 to $200 in the south shaft of the 500 foot level.

Cal Magner and Co., of the Bleak Belle of the Independence Con Co., today made a shipment of 20 tons of $40 ore.

The new boiler on the Keith and Grube lease to replace the one which exploded a few days ago, was put in on shaft 3 of the Vindicator yesterday and work was resumed.

It is stated on good authority that Messrs. Giddings and Leanox have thrown up their lease on the Unexpected claim of the Central Cripple Creek Mines Co. The single shipment sent out fell much below the minimum of pay ore and efforts made to find a body of pay ore have utterly failed.

Deed Filed.

A deed filed in the office of the county recorder today shows the sale of the Ninety-Five lode under date of August 27, from Geo. Moerder to J. C. Tatman and J. E. Devy, the consideration being $[illegible].

Deeds filed show the purchase by H. W. Fickinger of the Rose lode and an undivided one-half interest in the Ida lode. The consideration is not given.

Two deeds filed today show a purchase by C. W. Kurtz as trustee of the Nada and the Ouray lodes, the consideration in each case was $17[illegible]. The instruments were dated Sept. 6.

E. W. Sebben today filed deeds showing the conveyance to him of the mineral rights under lots in the Blue Belle addition in Anaconda. The deeds convey the mineral right of 17 lots. It is stated that he is forming a company which will be backed by Mary McKinney people that a much larger amount of property will be purchased and active operation will commence within a short time. Mr. Sebben could not be seen tonight and therefore the report could not be confirmed.

Default and Judgment Against Victor G. M. Co.

A LARGE SUM IS INVOLVED

Murderous Assault Made by a Young Bootblack—Camp Meeting of Seventh Day Adventists.

Denver Bureau Colorado Springs Gazette.

Denver, Sept. 6.—Default and judgment for $153,516.66 was taken in the district court this morning against the Victor G. M. Co. The judgment was awarded on notes payable on demand to David H. Moffatt. The suit was suppressed when filed and this is the first notice the public has received that it was ever instituted. The notes were given March 23, 1900.

The tramway cars will soon pass over the Sixteenth street viaduct, the heavy iron work having been completed, and the flooring completed. The viaduct will probably remain closed to other traffic for some time for the reason that the city is unable to lay new flooring on the roadway and sidewalks, both of which are in a dangerous condition at present.

Will Ware, a young colored man of the city, who was recently married, attacked Louis Epps with a butcher knife this morning and inflicted wounds that may prove fatal. Ware is a bootblack and afflicted with jealousy. To-day he went home unexpectedly and found Epps in the house. He attacked him and inflicted a large wound in his left side. Ware was arrested and will be held pending the recovery or death of Epps.

Seventh Day Adventists.

The Colorado conference of the Seventh Day Adventists opened in Harmon today. They are holding the conference in tents and about 300 are in attendance. The conference will last all the week. A number of the most prominent members of the church are in attendance.

John O'Neil, who has been organist for the Logan Avenue Methodist church for a number of years, has gone home to die. Mr. O'Neil has pulmonary troubles and upon being pronounced incurable he decided to return to his old home in Michigan, to spend his few remaining days. A large crowd of people were at the depot to bid him good bye.

The explosion of a kerosene lamp set fire to the residence of Mrs. Ollie Creek at 1815 Glenarm street last night at midnight. She was awakened by the light in her room in time to escape injury. The building, however, was already afire and her escape was a narrow one.

Lulu Penn Ingersol has commenced an action in the district court against the Denver City Tramway Co., demanding $10,000 for injuries received on a car on June 26 last. She received a broken arm.

Death of Mrs. Bell.

Mrs. Lillian Bell, the woman who was beaten by an unknown man the night of August 24, died at her home, corner of Seventeenth and Washington avenue, last night. With her death will probably end one of the most mysterious murders in the history of Denver as the detectives have no clue whatever to work on. The general supposition is that the man mistook Mrs. Bell for someone else and that she was the victim of mistaken identity. The detectives, however, feel that Mrs. Bell concealed something and probably her parents know more about the affair than they care to tell. Her death has cast a gloom over a large part of the city, as she was well known and universally loved. The coroner began his inquest late this afternoon and will use every effort to find out the man who is responsible for her death.

Armour Investments.

The Armours of Chicago have entered the mining fields of Colorado and yesterday through their representative, Mr. Robbins, they closed a $2,000,000 deal which gave them the possession of a number of mines in Teller and Gilpin counties. The names of the mines could not be learned, but Mr. Robbins says he will continue buying until they have expended $20,000,000 in Colorado mining property.

Already $10,000 has been subscribed to defray the expenses of the G. A. R. meeting here next year, and it will be a grand and great success. The report that a rate of 1 cent per mile could not be obtained is without foundation as no one has tried to secure rates as yet. No one doubts but that the railroads will do the square thing when the time comes.

Miss Ah Yo, a daughter of Wing Chang, the Chinese laundryman at 1539 Sixteenth street, was married yesterday to a wealthy Chinaman in Kansas City. The marriage was performed in the regular oriental manner.

Kansas Suit Dropped.

News was received last night that the state of Kansas had dropped its suit against Colorado over the Arkansas river water question. It will be remembered the suit was started for the purpose of prohibiting Colorado from using the river water for irrigation purposes. In dropping the suit the attorneys for Kansas state that at present there is water enough for both states and the suit will not be forced until some summer in which there is a drought.

A. M. E. Conference.

ROCKY FORD'S GREAT FEAST

Eighteen Thousand People Attended "Melon Day."

THERE WERE MELONS FOR ALL

Amusement Programme Furnished Good Sport for All—Sensational Event Filled for Today.

Special to the Gazette.

Rocky Ford, Sept. 6.—The one great day of the year for Rocky Ford, the watermelon festival, dawned clear and cool today.

The special trains began unloading their passengers at 10 o'clock this morning and kept it up until nearly 2 p. m.

The huge melon pile was the seductive attraction that yearly brings back the same people and always many new ones. The stack of melons was larger this year than usual, and so was the crowd. Expected onslaughts on the huge pile of delicious melons failed to wipe out the supply, and not until late this evening was the pile reduced.

Reports from the Santa Fe people say that 16,000 tickets were sold to Rocky Ford from various places and together with nearly that many who came in other ways swelled the attendance today to at least 18,000 people.

The amusement programme opened with a free-for-all trot or pace, in which Ramon M. got first place. She came second, and Sir Robert third. Best time, 2:19.

In the 2:40 trot Gold Standard won the big money, Penchant second and Nina C. third. Time, 2:33½.

The cowboy five mile race, change horse each mile, was won in 10:45, the best time ever made in a like race. Little string got first money, Taylor's second and Cabler's third.

The five-eighths of a mile dash was a good one and was taken by Tina P., first, Torlon second, and St. Germain third. Time, 1:07.

The half mile dash was a swift one and Dutch took first money with Tina P. a close second.

The bucking broncho exhibition was an exciting event. Six native horses were brought out in front of the grand stand, and hoodwinked. Three riders mounted and the fun began, which was fast and furious until the horses were subdued. Then the other three were treated in like manner. Of the six contestants the judges picked out four, between whom they divided the purse of $100. These men were Messrs. Pusey, Noble, Grimsley and Humiston.

Tomorrow is the last day of the fair and the coursing event is reserved for that day.

The colored men, Pickett Bros., will give a performance in throwing steers with the bare hands and holding down the steer by seizing the animal's nose with their teeth. This exhibition will surely be given, in spite of statements of officers of the State Humane society and others.

LABOR MEN AT OURAY.

Special to the Gazette.

Ouray, Sept. 6.—A committee of the Ouray Miners' union escorted Edward Boyce, president of the Western Federation of Miners, David C. Coates, president of the State Federation of Labor, and Hon. Henry Cohen of Denver, to Red Mountain last evening, and after addresses were made by the gentlemen named they returned to the city and departed for Silverton this morning.

FLORENCE ITEMS

Work on Home League Home for Children Will Commence Within a Short Time.

Special to the Gazette.

Florence, Sept. 6.—The painters and decorators of this city will meet Friday evening for the purpose of perfecting an organization. A musicians' union will also be formed. D. C. Coates, president of the State Federation of Labor, will be present and perfect the organization.

Children's Home.

Subscriptions for the Florence Children's Home are coming in rapidly. The plans are already drafted and are for an elegant nine room gothic style brick building which will accommodate 30 children. Jay N. Lind, founder of the Home League, has returned from Denver, where he had been perfecting plans. It is thought now that the building will be in the hands of the contractors by the 20th of the month.

The foundation for the Monroe school house will be completed by the last of the week.

The public schools of this city will begin next Monday. The roll will be a great deal larger than it was last year. There will be a general teachers' meeting at the McCandless school building, Saturday, September 8.

The Oil Well Supply company shipped a carload of machinery and supplies to Dr. Grannis of Colorado Springs, who is drilling for oil north of Pueblo. The first hole drilled was so crooked that further operations were called off and another well will be drilled.

The Santa Fe railroad company has a force of 25 men at work on its tracks between here and Canon cleaning out the ballasting between the rails and cutting down the ties preparatory to laying a third rail. The purpose of this narrow gauge is to run to Brookside from Canon for the purpose of getting coal from the mines at that town for the Bartlett smelter.

The farmers of the Hardscrabble farming district are busy threshing their crops of small grain, which is abundant, but the corn is somewhat a failure. The prosperity of that country in general means much to Florence.

September—dreams are in the sound—
Dreams in the warm and yellow ground,
Dreams in the ripening leaves of trees,
And in the drone of lazy bees,
And in the haze upon the hills,
And in the sleepy meadow rills,
Dreams in the soft, fruit-scented air
That waits away the lightest care,
Dreams full of whispers in the corn
That heaps the stubble newly shorn.

NEWS NOTES FROM PUEBLO

Increasing Interest in the Coming State Fair.

LARGE CROWDS EXPECTED

Rio Grande Switchman Injured—A Kentucky Pedestrian Has Reached Pueblo After a Long Walk

Pueblo Bureau Colorado Springs Gazette.

Pueblo, Sept. 6.—Those in charge of Pueblo's street fair which will be held here Oct. 3, 4, 5 and 6 are becoming more and more convinced that the celebration will be an event of success. Advertising matter is being sent all over the state and the fact that "Pueblo pays the bill" will be known to the inhabitants of towns as far south as Trinidad, as far east as Las Animas, north to Denver and west to Leadville. Newspapers throughout the state have been publishing articles boosting the fair and an immense number of visitors are sure to be here from other towns. Between 60 and 65 booths will be erected on Union avenue, Main street and Santa Fe avenue, where the fair will be held by local merchants alone, and a number of jobbing houses and other firms throughout the state will have exhibits on the streets. At principal points to be chosen later stands will be erected where free continuous shows will amuse the multitude. There will be a "Midway" at the grand stand on Main street between Fifth and Sixth streets. During the fair the street cars will all be run on Santa Fe avenue in order to prevent any congestion of travel on Main street.

Switchman Injured.

Gideon Baker, a switchman for the D. & R. G., while attempting to make a coupling at 3:15 this afternoon, had the first finger of his left hand badly pinched. It is hoped, however, that amputation will not be necessary.

Immense crowds from Colorado Springs, Manitou, Canon City and Pueblo went to Rocky Ford today, passing through here. Over 1,000 went from Pueblo alone, leaving here about 8 o'clock this morning and returning about 7:30 tonight.

W. J. Atkinson of Kentucky, reached Pueblo today in the course of a remarkable pedestrian tour. Mr. Atkinson came to Pueblo from Telluride. He claims to have made the journey from the Blue Grass state almost entirely on foot. He is keeping a diary which he expects to have published in an eastern newspaper.

Grant Marshall, a brother-in-law of Charles B. Hughes of Pueblo, while rounding some cattle at Doyle arroyo on the Huerfano, was thrown sustaining painful injuries. Mr. Marshall's horse stepped into a prairie dog hole and after throwing him fell upon him. His back was hurt and he was brought to Pueblo and placed in a hospital for surgical attention.

Fifty Years of California.

"Half a century comes to an end on the ninth of September of the current year since California, taken from the lap of Mexican indolence and tossed into the arms of American adventurers, was delivered at the bosom of Columbia, an infant state, with gold nuggets in her hats and ships of commerce at her feet. The story of these fifty years, considered even without the enthusiasm which the contemplation of unusual things stimulates, is one of those remarkable dramas of human history that can happen only in such a country as America.

"Beginning in an environment of Latin laziness and religious contentment, plunged suddenly into a whirl of money-getting with all the attendant unconventionalities, vices and opportunities, separated by 2,000 miles from the then farthest western settlements of the country, and with no resources other than her own, the Golden state has had a long and noteworthy struggle to build herself up into the full glory of statehood which she now unquestionably begins to possess.

"For more than ten years after the first rush of immigrants, California did almost nothing but tear the earth to pieces to find gold. With 158,000 square miles of territory to wander over, with no use for the land other than to make it yield nuggets and dust, the prospectors went at the work on a scale whose vastness has since stamped itself on all the doings of the community. Inventing gigantic hydraulic dredges, they dug holes in the banks of streams and washed away the sides of mountains, recklessly and without regard to the future. Within nine years from the time Marshall picked up the first shining piece of ore in the tail-race of Sutter's mill, $456,000,000 had been contributed to the world's supply of gold, and market values and prices everywhere were beginning to be affected. The sense of bigness at home and bigness abroad mingled itself with the sense of the ease, good-fellowship and the comparative irresponsibility which characterized the life of the time.

"Yet, although such was the great richness and the breadth of things when considered in a lump, and although such was California's initial contribution to the world's history, the benefit to the individual was slight. With 100,000 men in the state, nine-tenths of whom were engaged in actual mining, it was estimated that the average remuneration to the miner was only $600 per year—a very meager morsel of reward for men who had struggled across the deserts or roughed it round the Horn and over the Isthmus in the hope of becoming rich. As the first decade closed, the miners worked back to the seashore and the cities, leaving the foothills scarred with the ruin they had wrought, yawning with the evidences of the power of their inventions and the heedlessness of their quest for gold. Huge hills stand to the present day washed half away or ripped and hollowed to the depth of hundreds of feet until their natural shape is as much distorted as if a volcano or an earthquake had been at work among them.

"Men who could not find work in the placers, or whose claims petered out so that only Chinamen could find profit in working them, turned to the old stand-by of farming. Here again the territory to be exploited was wide and unoccupied. Most of the richest land was held in Spanish grants, of great acreage, and the new farmers were brought at once into the presence of the idea of large fields. Instead of occupying and tilling forty to 160 acres, as was done in the eastern states, the Californians thought themselves poor when they could not have above 400 acres. As early as in 1870 there were in the state over 3,000 farms of 1,000 acres each, while the average farm comprised over 460 acres. Ranches of 10,000 or 20,000 acres are still common. Big farms suggested big implements. California invented and contributed to the farming business of the world the multiple gangplow and the combined harvester and thresher, which subsequently aided the Dakotas and other northwestern states in the great production of wheat by which St. Paul and Minneapolis, and afterward the phenomenal city of Duluth, were made thrifty and notable.

"To the amazement of all who experimented, or to those who looked on with the sneer of the cynic at the experimenters, the farming proved as fruitful as the mining. By merely scratching the surface, the wheat growers obtained a yield of seventy to one hundred bushels to the acre, and at an expense in cultivation, through the use of the gangplow, as light as forty cents per acre. Vegetables grew the year round, fat and happy, running their weight and size to such unusual figures as fifty pounds for a cabbage and 200 pounds for a squash. Muscatel grapes produced five to sixteen tons to the acre. The wool clip averaged seven pounds per animal, against an average of four pounds for the United States.

"This exceptional agricultural richness was made known abroad only less rapidly than the publication of the state's mineral richness. Thus California began her farming as she had begun her mining—in an unusual way, on a large scale and with a strong pull on public attention. Ranching, including stock raising, became possible. It was taken up as an investment by individuals who had made money in the mines, and was traded in as mining properties were traded in. Efforts were made to promote immigration, and a habit of self-advertising in a manner befitting the state's prolific resources fixed itself upon the people. This habit developed in 1886 into the phenomenal boom in Los Angeles and Southern California.

"Possibly because no one loves so well or knows so well as a happy cleric of the old type what good wine is, the padres of the Spanish missions had surrounded themselves with vineyards of wine-making grapes. These the new settlers seized upon and found them to contain the same great possibilities of the soil when it was altered for wheat, and of the rocks when they were washed for gold. Shrewd men foresaw occupation and wealth in wineries and entered at once upon the study and practice of wine culture. In the thirty of forty years which have since elapsed California has advanced to the position of one of the greatest wine and brandy producing countries in the world. Since 1867 the total vintage has been 242,129,000 gallons. The largest vineyard in the world, consisting of 4,000 acres, is to be found within the state. European royalty now drinks California wines, in many instances preferring them to the older and more famous brands of France and of the Rhine."—(Arthur I. Street in Athenæ's.

Two Hours in Asia.

John Burroughs concludes in the September Century his account of the Harriman expedition to Alaska and Bering Sea. By a sudden change of programme the coast of Siberia was included in the itinerary, and the party spent "two whole hours in Asia—but Mr. Burroughs promises not to base a book on his Asiatic experiences.

"According to our original programme, our outward journey should have ended here; but Mrs. Harriman expressed a wish to see Siberia, and, if all went well, the midnight sun. "Very well," replied Mr. Harriman, "we will go to Siberia;" and toward that barren shore our prow was turned. It was about 8 o'clock in the evening when we left St. Paul's; a dense fog was prevailing, hiding the shore. We had not been half an hour under way when a raking blow from some source made the ship tremble from stem to stern; then another, and another still more severe. Many of the company were at dinner; all sprang to their feet and looked the surprise and alarm they did not speak. The engines were quickly reversed, and in a few moments the ship's prow swung off to the right, and the danger was past. The stern of the ship, which sat two feet deeper in the water than the bow, had raked across the rocks. No damage was done, and we had had a novel sensation, something analogous, I fancy, to the feeling one has upon land during a slight earthquake.

"Some of us hoped this incident would cause Mr. Harriman to turn back. Bering sea is a treacherous sea; it is shallow, it has many islands, and in summer it is nearly always shaped by fog. But our host was a man not easy to turn back; in five minutes he was romping with his children again as if nothing had happened. But the ship's course was changed to southeast around Walrus Island. If did, indeed, look for a while as if we had more than half a mind to turn back. But in a few hours we were headed toward Siberia again, and went plunging through the fog and obscurity, with our "ferocious whistle," as Professor Emerson characterized it, tearing the silence, and with it our sleep, to tatters.

DOLIN SOAP & CREAM CO.

China Best Unbroken.

The Rev. Dr. D. Z. Sheffield, for 20 years a missionary in China, urges in the September Century that the Middle Kingdom ought not to be dismembered.

It is easy to say that it is better that China be broken up and its people reformed in its social institutions than that the past corrupt and antediluvian order of society continue; but is disintegration or continued stagnation the only alternative? What are the prospective dangers accompanying the dispolution of the Chinese government? The territory and people would be divided up between England, Russia, France and Germany. How long could this order of things continue? As a necessity of government the Chinese in large numbers would ultimately receive western military training and acquire skill and experience in military evolution. Under proper conditions of discipline and direction the Chinese are courageous and hardy soldiers. The nation has a deep reverence for its ancestry, a strong race attachment, a profound regard for its customs and institutions. If the people are broken apart by foreign power in the time of their weakness, they will come together again in fierce collision with that power when they have in some measure recovered possession of their strength. China is too great a prize to be divided up among the nations of the west, to become an added element of jealousy and rivalry. The suggestion of the division taxes the diplomacy of the nations to the utmost to preserve peace in their relations. It is doubtful if it can be accomplished without war, and if successfully accomplished the possession and government of this vast disintegrated territory, with its people restless under the wrongs they have suffered, would increase the present international tension and continually jeopardise the peace of the world.

WANTS DAMAGES FOR A BAD SHOCK

Guy Hinckley Sues Rapid Transit Co. for Injuries Alleged to Have Been Caused by Live Wire.

A suit filed in the district court yesterday is entitled Guy B. Hinckley vs. the Colorado Springs Rapid Transit Railway company. The complaint alleges that the plaintiff, while riding as a passenger on a car going to Colorado City on July 25 last was compelled to stand on the rear platform because of the crowded condition of the car; that while standing there his hand came in contact with an exposed live wire and he suffered from burns upon his hands and body and a shock to his nervous system from the electricity; that he was knocked unconscious and that for a long time he was reduced to a nervous, irritable and diseased condition as a consequence. He charges the company with gross neglect of its duty to protect passengers. He prays for $5,000 damages to his person and health and $10 for medical service along with the costs of the suit. Vanatta & Johns are his attorneys.

The courts had a light day yesterday. Three cases were set for yesterday in the district court, but one was nolled and the other two were continued.

The case of the People versus Clarence Davis was nolled by the district attorney. Davis is the man who was charged with assaulting a railroad conductor at Palmer Lake.

The case of the People versus William Brown was continued from the morning until the afternoon and in the afternoon was continued until Sept. 13 on account of the absence of witnesses for the prosecution. This case grew out of the trouble on the Antlers a short time ago, Brown being accused of assault with intent to kill upon the foreman, Haines. R. L. Kennedy was appointed by the court to defend Brown.

The case of the People versus Charles Webster was also continued until Sept. 13. Webster's bond was reduced to $250, and L. F. P. Gilland went as surety for him. This is a case growing out of some trouble at Colorado City some time ago when Webster, in assisting an officer to arrest a man, is alleged to have struck the man over the head.

In the case of E. E. Nichols, Jr., vs. John J. Tootle et al., an order was entered that the plaintiff may amend the complaint. An order was issued for another summons for the defendant Tootle.

In the case of Winternitz versus McGuire, defendant's motion for a new trial was denied and judgment was ordered on the verdict for $210 and costs.

IN JUSTICE COURTS

In Justice Ruby's court yesterday the case of the People vs. A. F. Bear, who is charged with forgery, was continued until September 10 at 10 o'clock a. m. The defendant appeared and gave bond for $1,000, after which he was released.

The case of James Hart vs. Peter McElogue was continued until September 11 at 9 o'clock a. m.

An attachment suit entitled G. W. Riggs et al., vs. J. Seitz et al., was filed yesterday. The plaintiffs ask judgment for $94. The case was set for hearing on September 11.

A continuance was taken in the case of B. G. Robbins vs. A. D. Bowers until September 8 at 9 o'clock a. m.

An unlawful detainer suit was filed by H. Goets against Mrs. J. W. Seitz. The case was set for September 11 at 9 o'clock a. m.

An attachment suit was brought by M. G. Smith vs. E. S. Garrison. The plaintiff asks judgment for $32. The case was set for September 11.

A money demand suit was filed by S. A. Herring against E. Sinock. The plaintiff asks judgment for $[illegible]. The case was set for hearing on September 12.

In Justice Ruby's court yesterday the F. F. Roby Flour, Grain and Storage company filed an attachment suit against C. M. McCoy. The plaintiff company asks judgment for $32.10. The case was set for September 12.

Mrs. Annie McGovern brought suit against J. P. Waldren to replevin five horses which she claims are in the possession of the defendant. The case was set for September 12.

GOE WENT TO WAHL; WAHL GOES TO COURT

A young man by the name of Harold H. Goe and L. C. Wahl, the bicycle dealer, have become involved in so much trouble during the past two days that it will probably take two courts to settle their differences. They will appear in police court at 9 o'clock this morning as a result of a fight which occurred between them yesterday morning and on September 12 they will appear in Justice Ruby's court as parties to a replevin suit.

The trouble has grown out of a general misunderstanding about a bicycle which Goe claimed as his rightful property and on which Wahl says full payment has not been made. A few days ago Goe purchased a bicycle from another young man who in turn had purchased it from Wahl. Goe was assured that the wheel had been paid for and he was given a receipt for the amount which he paid in the transaction. On Wednesday afternoon Goe was approached by Wahl and informed that there was $12 due on the wheel and that if he could not pay the amount he would be made to forfeit the wheel. He refused to do either and according to the story which he tells Wahl then seized upon the wheel and walked away with it, saying that he would show the contract made by the original purchaser if Goe would accompany him to his store on North Tejon street.

Goe went to Wahl's store but states that instead of showing the contract the latter commanded him to leave the store at once. He complied and went immediately to Justice Ruby's court and started suit against Wahl to replevin the wheel.

Yesterday morning Goe, accompanied by a constable, went to Wahl's store on North Tejon street for the purpose of identifying the wheel. He claims that as he entered the door he was met by Wahl and was greeted with a blow in the face. Goe and the officer did not make further trouble there but the former went to police headquarters and made a complaint against Wahl. Officer Dayton then went to Wahl's place and ordered him to appear in court this morning at 9 o'clock.

VALUABLE GIFT OF BOOKS TO COLORADO COLLEGE

Mrs. T. H. Edsall has recently presented to Colorado college the valuable historical and genealogical records which some time ago she deposited in the College library as a loan collection. A number of the volumes are contemporaneous accounts of Revolutionary battlefields and battles, journals, letters, etc.; others, a much larger number, are histories of colonial towns and cities and state archives—all exceedingly valuable as giving the inner history of the times and the intimate life of the people. Among the many titles, some that seem especially attractive, are as follows: "Early Letters of Kings County," "Origin and Early Annals of Harlem," "Records of New Amsterdam," and many others of smaller towns and cities in New Jersey, New York and Massachusetts. The collection also includes a dozen or more volumes of valuable genealogical records of one of which, John Berry and his family, Mr. Edsall was himself the editor.

Deserted Cities of China.

Owing to the peculiar superstitions of the Chinese people, the greatest care must be exercised in the treatment of cities after they have been captured, and it will be unfortunate if the allied forces, in capturing Tien-tsin, have wrecked any considerable property, or done any unnecessary bombarding or destruction of its walls. The Chinese locate cities just as they build houses or dig graves, according to the directions of their geomancers or "earth doctors," as they call them. Before they will build a city or bury an ancestor these geomancers must, with a great deal of rigmarole, pass upon the luck or favorableness of the spot selected, and if the selection of a spot originally declared to be lucky should be followed by bad luck to the one selecting it, other geomancers will be called in, and if the spot is pronounced by them to be unlucky it will at once be abandoned.

The entire city of Peking was moved by the first Emperor of the Mongol dynasty because his earth doctors told him that bad luck was associated with the old site, and that if he wished to establish his dynasty he must build a new capital. The modern city of Peking was the result. The ancient walls of the old city are still to be seen on the banks of the Hun River, about eight miles southwest of the present city, although it was abandoned over seven centuries ago. The cities [illegible] the Tai Ping's fifty years ago have never been recovered, because the Chinese believe that their luck had been spoiled. BRYAN AND THE GERMAN VOTE.

FROM time to time we hear a good deal in an indefinite way that the German vote of the middle west has switched from McKinley to Bryan, and this is expected to have a notable effect in such states as Indiana, Illinois and Wisconsin, and indeed is given as the main reason why the Democrats insist that they have a chance to carry these states.

The Chicago Record, one of the most independent and reliable newspapers of the country, has taken the trouble to secure information as to the present attitude of the German newspapers as compared with their politics of four years ago. The proprietor of one of the leading press clipping bureaus of the country was asked to furnish a list of the fifteen most influential German newspapers of the country and their presidential inclinations. This was done as follows:

	1892.	1896.	1900.
Illinois Zeitung, Chicago, (ind.)	Cleveland	McKinley	McKinley
Volksblatt, Detroit, (dem.)	Cleveland	Bryan	Bryan
Abendpost, Detroit, (rep.)	Harrison	McKinley	McKinley
Westliche Post, St. Louis, (ind. rep.)	Harrison	McKinley	McKinley
Anzeiger des Westens, St. Louis, (ind.)	Cleveland	Palmer	McKinley
Staats Zeitung, New York, (ind.)	Cleveland	McKinley	McKinley
Morgen Journal, New York, (dem.)	Cleveland	Bryan	Bryan
New York Zeitung, N. Y. (rep.)	Harrison	McKinley	McKinley
Freie Presse, Brooklyn, N. Y. (ind. rep.)	Harrison	McKinley	McKinley
Freie Presse, Cincinnati, (rep.)	Harrison	McKinley	McKinley
Volksblatt, Cincinnati, (ind. rep.)	Harrison	McKinley	McKinley
Wachter und Anzeiger, Cleveland, (dem.)	Cleveland	Bryan	Bryan
Demokrat, Philadelphia, (dem.)	Cleveland	Palmer	McKinley
Volksblatt, Pittsburg, (ind.)	Harrison	McKinley	McKinley

"I have received letters from the editors of each of the papers named," said the proprietor of the clipping bureau, "stating their position at the last three presidential elections, with the exception of the New York Staats Zeitung and the Brooklyn Freie Presse. One of my employes, however, who went over to interview the Staats Zeitung on the subject, was told that the paper was on the fence, but that Mr. Herman Ridder, the editor, was certainly in favor of McKinley. My clerk, who reads the Brooklyn Freie Presse daily, tells me that from the editorials in that paper he has come to the conclusion that it is supporting McKinley. It certainly does not support Bryan."

It will be noticed that the only changes noted are of two papers that supported the Gold Democrat nominee in 1896 and are now for President McKinley.

It cannot be denied that there are some Democratic newspapers now supporting Mr. Bryan that opposed him in 1896, but it is a very significant fact that 13 out of 15 of the most influential as judged by a competent expert, are unchanged, while the other two are additions to the Republican ranks.

AN EXTRAORDINARY ARGUMENT.

THE argument that Senator Wellington presented to the people of Maryland on Tuesday last, is an extraordinary one. The Democratic party is still committed by its platform to the doctrines of free trade and free silver, and the candidate of the party for president has been foremost in the support of them.

But Senator Wellington stated as an argument in Mr. Bryan's favor that he did not believe that there was any danger of material changes in the tariff or financial laws if Mr. Bryan was elected.

What a spectacle for honest Americans.

Here is a senator of the United States who believes that the financial and tariff policies to which Mr. Bryan has given his adherence are dangerous to the welfare of the country, and yet he recommends Mr. Bryan's election for the reason that he believes that he cannot or will not keep the pledges he has made.

But that is not the worst of it.

Mr. Bryan was himself present at the meeting at which Senator Wellington made this speech and he did not deny or explain the statement made by the previous speaker.

The Democratic candidate for president allows his eastern supporters to ask votes for him on the ground that he cannot or will not carry out the pledges of the Democratic platform, while at the same time other supporters in other sections are urging his devotion to these same pledges as the principal reason for his support.

This is not honesty, it is not sincerity. It is not in keeping with the popular idea of Mr. Bryan's character.

EIGHT GOOD REASONS WHY COLORADO SHOULD GO REPUBLICAN.

1. Because Colorado's interests demand the expansion of Pacific trade.

2. Because the Republican platform makes a plain declaration in favor of national aid to irrigation, which the Democratic platform does not do.

3. Because the Republican administration has been a magnificent success.

4. Because the fusion-Democratic state government has been a miserable failure.

5. Because Democratic success in the national election would destroy confidence, stop investment, paralyze business and substitute contraction for expansion.

6. Because Colorado ought to be in sympathy and alliance with the most progressive and most intelligent Americanism.

7. Because the Democratic campaign of false issues, demagoguery, misrepresentation and inconsistency ought to be rebuked by all intelligent and patriotic Americans.

8. Because the Democratic party has practically abandoned free silver without having the honesty to say so.

THE RESULT IN VERMONT.

ANY crumb is a comfort to starving politicians, and it is natural that the Democrats should undertake to distort the facts in Vermont in such a way as to afford a basis for the statement of great democratic gains.

The facts give very little reason for such a claim, but a little goes a long way with the Democrats these days.

The vote in Vermont for the last four general elections was as follows:

	Dem.	Rep.	Rep. Plu.
1894—Governor	14,142	42,853	28,021
1896 President	10,667	51,127	40,490
1898 Governor	14,686	38,555	23,869
1900 Governor	13,842	47,876	32,034

—Seven towns lacking.

The Republican plurality is nearly 10,000 greater than it was two years ago, and it is larger than it has been at any election in the state for thirty years, with the exception of the presidential year of 1896. The Democratic vote for governor this year is only about a thousand more than it was for governor in 1896, while the Populist vote dropped from 8,313 in 1896, to 1,053 for "all others" in 1900. The Republican vote for governor was about 5,500 less in 1900 than for governor in 1896, a result that is fully explained by the importance of certain local issues and the prevalence of general certainty in the result, without the necessity of reverting to anti-imperialism or any other national issue.

The result in Vermont will be entirely satisfactory to the Republicans of the country. The falling off in the total vote of some 12,000 is fairly explainable by the fact that the people of the state like those everywhere else in the country, were too prosperous and too busy to vote in an election whose result they considered to be certain. The Republican decrease was 5,370 from the vote for governor four years ago; while the decrease of the vote of the combined opposition was 6,808. The plurality is less than four years ago, but the majority over all others is actually greater now than it was then.

This last point is one of very great importance. The disappearance of the Populist vote and the fact that there is no Gold Democrat ticket in the field, make it probable that McKinley's majority in Vermont this fall will be even greater than it was four years ago.

WORSE THAN DEATH.

THE anarchist murderer of King Humbert has been sentenced to life imprisonment, but life imprisonment in Italy is something different from the easy entertainment at the expense of the state which is meted out to Colorado murderers for a brief term.

The punishment to be inflicted upon Bresci is actually worse than death. For an indefinite length of time he will be confined in a secret cell, where he will have scarcely room to turn around. His bed is but a narrow sloping plank; for food he will be restricted to bread and water. He is condemned to absolute silence. If he breaks the rule he is subject to severe punishment. After serving his term in the secret cell he will be removed to another, somewhat larger, but equally devoid of comfort. Here he will remain for 10 long years in solitary confinement. He will not be allowed to read, write, smoke or work. He will be given a modicum of bread and water once a day. He must endure the siege of absolute silence and absolute idleness.

From such a fate the only relief is death or insanity, and one or the other of these will surely overtake him before the term of the law's greatest rigors has expired.

No American state would prescribe such a punishment, which is as much worse than the death penalty as the lax and insufficient Colorado penalty is inferior to it.

THE BEGINNING OF SCHOOL.

THERE is no surer sign of the passing of summer than the opening of the schools. It is a strong intimation to the older generation as well as a stern command to the younger, that the vacation is at an end and the time come to settle down to a good winter's work in the cause of education or business. And it seems doubly significant when, as in the case this year, there comes at the same time a chilling of the atmosphere and an appreciable change of the weather that carries an unmistakable prophesy of coming frosts.

Colorado Springs is well provided with schools. The buildings are of modern construction, conveniently planned and located, the teaching force is nowhere surpassed, the general system is a good one and the management and supervision is competent and free from the blight of partisanship to a degree seldom surpassed. If the accommodations are not quite all that might be desired in point of capacity, a sufficient explanation is to be found in the rapid increase of population which makes crowding imperative and a reduction in the hours for the lower grades an occasional necessity. If the city would stand still for a while the new buildings would quickly furnish the necessary room, but if present conditions continue the houses now being built will be filled as soon as completed.

If Colorado Springs is proud of her school houses and her teachers she is even more proud of her school children. Take them on the average and they are a pretty good lot, and nowhere in the world are to be found children brighter, prettier or better behaved than those which troop through the streets of mornings in the noyday of life when hard lessons have to be learned only five days in the week.

The International Magazine for September contains an article of local interest. It is by Mr. E. E. Rittenhouse of this city, who went to Korea some years ago in connection with an American railway enterprise, and who has a very thorough knowledge of the country and its people gained from actual experience. The article, which is entitled "Astride a Korean Pony," is thoroughly entertaining in style, and is illustrated from original photographs. The same number of this magazine also contains a well written and well illustrated article on Glenwood Springs by Evelyn English.

If Chairman Jones could only do as well in the United States as in his native Arkansas, Mr. Bryan might as well check his trunks for Washington without further delay. But unfortunately for Mr. Bryan, Chairman Jones is, as the almanacs say, calculated for the latitude of Arkansas.

The selection of Denver as the meeting place for the next G. A. R. reunion gives a substantial basis for next season's Colorado tourist travel. Now let the railroads do their part with low rates, and there is no reason why we should not have as good business then as we have had this year.

One of the speakers at the meeting of the league of Colorado municipalities wanted the state to make it a misdemeanor for railway employes to bring tramps into the state. A better plan would be to establish quarantine stations with lavatory attachments at the state line.

A few more "Democratic gains" such as were made in Vermont on Monday and Bryan will lose Georgia and Texas in November.

The real reason why Governor Thomas couldn't address the El Paso Democracy is said to be that he couldn't leave Thomas J. Maloney alone in Denver.

The latest addition to the list of Mr. Bryan's unfortunate friends is ex-Congressman Wilson, of the Wilson bill.

FROM THE PRESS OF THE NATION.

A Party That Learns Nothing.

(St. Louis Globe-Democrat.)

Oliver P. Morton, Indiana's war governor used to compare the Democratic party to a man in a railway train who had his back to the locomotive. He could not see the objects on the road until the train had passed them. Bryan and his party are in that predicament at the present time. They are howling about empire in connection with the Philippines, unconscious of the fact that the time to shriek about empire, if any shrieking was to be done at all, was before the peace treaty was ratified. Bryan urged ratification, and probably his influence had something to do with the margin which it received. Several Democratic senators at the time were understood to have said that they voted for the treaty on his solicitation. He told them we would take the Philippines, and then his party would fight the administration for accepting them, and force it to give them up, thus scoring a brilliant triumph for the Democracy.

Things did not turn out as Bryan intended, and he and his dupes are victimized. The United States has the islands, Spain has slunk out of the element, the majority of the islanders, except as they have been incited to war on the United States as a measure of aid to Bryan in his canvass, are pleased on account of their emancipation and their connection with the United States. Everybody is satisfied all around except the poor Bryanites who attempted to use the situation in the Philippines as an issue in party politics, and find that they are beaten. Nobody now except Bryan and a few other Bourbons seriously talks of giving up the islands. They are connected with the United States, and the relation will be permanent. The Filipinos will get a larger share of self-government than they ever expected in the past. This share will be increased as they show that they are prepared for it, and the Filipinos, the United States and the cause of civilization will be the gainers. As Culberson of Texas remarked long ago, "We've done expanded."

When Clement L. Vallandigham in 1871 warned the Democracy that it must stop fighting the war amendments and war legislation and recognize accomplished facts if it ever expected to win the confidence of the American people he did something for his party which went a long way toward compensating for his copperheadism and general wrongheadedness during the war. The Democracy did not take his counsel kindly at first, but it gradually went over to his position. Bryan and the rest of his supporters are fighting facts today just as they were in 1865-70, and the consequences to them will be as disastrous as they were then. Expansion is the settled policy of the United States. The territory over which the flag floats will be held. The issues which the country faced when it decided to retain the Philippines and Porto Rico will be succeeded. The time for Bryan to fight what he calls "imperialism" was when the peace treaty was pending in the senate. The question of the disposition of the islands was settled by the vote by which both House and Senate passed the legislation to put it in operation. Today, as a third of a century ago, the Democracy is groping in the graveyard of dead and buried issues, and the country now, as then, will proceed on its mission without consulting that party's wishes or interests.

Bryan and Vallandigham.

(Chicago Inter Ocean.)

Mr. Bryan must have been giving his days and nights to study of Clement L. Vallandigham's works. That notorious copperhead's thoughts are echoed in all Mr. Bryan's recent speeches. This similarity of thought is natural, for Mr. Bryan now, like Vallandigham in 1863, advocates surrender to rebels.

Vallandigham's most violent and treasonable speech was delivered May 1, 1863, at Mount Vernon, Ohio. He began by proclaiming his "right to criticise the acts of our military servants." He cited as a precedent for such criticism the fact that "Tom Corwin, in the face of congress, hoped our volunteers in Mexico might be welcomed with bloody hands to hospitable graves." Mr. Bryan, in his speech of acceptance, on August 8, 1900, at Indianapolis, began by proclaiming the same right of criticism and also alleged Mexican war precedents.

Vallandigham spoke of the suppression of the secession revolt as "a wicked and unnecessary war—a war for the crushing out of liberty." He declared the Republican administration did not wish to end the war. If it had it "could have saved the 20,000 lives lost at Fredericksburg." In the same vein Mr. Bryan spoke of the suppression of the Tagal revolt as "a war of conquest, and, we add, it is unchristian," for which "there was never any occasion." He likewise intimated that the administration did not wish to end the war. "The Republican party," he said, "is responsible today for every drop of blood drawn in the Philippines."

Vallandigham feared the war for the Union would result in the overthrow of the republic. "The men in power," he said, "are attempting to establish a despotism." He frequently recurred to this idea. "If those in authority are allowed to accomplish their purposes," he said in the same speech, "the people will be deprived of their liberties and a monarchy will be established."

Mr. Bryan likewise feared that enforcing American laws on American soil would result in the republic's overthrow. He said the president had already established a despotism. "The will of the president" he said, "has been the only law in the Philippines." He implored his hearers to "consider the effect of imperialism upon our own nation." He declared that "even now we are beginning to see the paralyzing influence of imperialism." He frequently expressed his dread of a monarchy. He asserted that the "Republican party has accepted the European idea and planted itself upon the ground taken by George III."

Of course, Mr. Bryan's statements now are as false, his fears now are as baseless, his predictions now are as unwarranted, as were Vallandigham's statements, fears, and predictions in 1863. The Republican party established no monarchy then and does not even dream of establishing one now. William McKinley is doing now just what Abraham Lincoln was doing then—compelling rebels to obey the laws of the United states.

On the other hand, Mr. Bryan and his party are now encouraging rebels, just as Vallandigham and his party did then. That Mr. Bryan should now use Vallandigham's arguments against enforcing the laws of the United States is altogether natural. The excuses and arguments for secession and rebellion are always the same.

Senator Stewart Hits Bryan.

(Philadelphia Press.)

The fact that Senator Stewart, of Nevada, has turned against Bryan is significant of what Bryan loses by his demagogery in the matter of imperialism. Senator Stewart may justly be credited with discovering "the crime of 1873." It is true that it took him a long time to do it, and also that he was one of the perpetrators of the "crime," as he voted in the Senate for the bill which is alleged to have "demonetized silver." But the Senator, once he discovered the alleged "crime," was the most vigorous of all the sleuths who started out to expose it. Bryan followed on long after Stewart, and got the greater part of his campaign material from the Senator's speeches and publications on the subject. But now that Bryan has espoused the chimera of "anti-imperialism," and is helping the operators of the United States in the Philippines, Senator Stewart withdraws his support of Bryan. Stewart is in favor of the policy of expansion, which has been the policy of the nation from the start. The retention of the Philippines and the expansion of our markets in the Orient are deemed by Senator Stewart of great importance to the nation. He has no sympathy with Bryan's humbuggery on the question of "imperialism," and therefore comes out in support of McKinley. Many other prominent men have deserted Bryan for a like reason. Bryan has secured the support of Carl Schurz and a few other so-called independent free traders, but he has lost Senator Stewart of Nevada, Governor Wells of Utah, and a host of others because of "imperialism."

The United States produces more than it consumes. The ratio of increase in production is vastly greater than that of the increase in population. In the meantime the markets to which we must look for the disposal of our growing surplus of products are in danger of being closed to us. The Orient is the principal and most promising of those markets. If we allow Russia, Germany, France and other powers to control that market by parceling among themselves China, Korea and other territory, that market will be closed to us, just as Madagascar was, where our growing trade was nipped in the bud when France took possession of the country. If we had not been in possession of the Philippine islands when the trouble broke out in China we would have had little to say as to the future of China. Without the Philippine islands Secretary Hay's proposition for the "open door" in China would have probably met with a rebuff.

If Bryan's proposition immediately to withdraw from the Philippines should be carried out the islands would soon pass into control of other powers. Bryan's proposition, that we protect this semi-savage government which he proposes to set up in the Philippines, is silly in the extreme. Congress would never vote a dollar for such a purpose, and we could not fight the powers, and they would not stand as government in the Philippines, where there could be no hope of financial redress for injury to their subjects. Hence Bryan's policy means not only the loss of the Philippine market, with its promise of a large trade in the future, but it means the closing to us of China and other eastern markets. Where are we going to dispose of that increasing surplus of products? Senator Stewart and many other of Bryan's old supporters will not follow him in any such suicidal course as that, nor will the people of the United States in general.

If it were not for the electoral votes Bryan will get from the South because of the race hatred and disfranchisement of the colored men, he would cut a sorry figure in the coming election. But starting out with over 100 electoral votes for which he has to make no contest whatever, he may be said to have a chance of success, though the blow Senator Stewart deals him is a hard one.

It will be observed that the United States is still master of the situation in China. The American programme in dealing with the Boxers and the imperial government did not commend itself to the favor of the rest of the nations at first, but it has been indorsed by pretty much all of them at last. In the negotiations between the allies and that Mephistopheles and trickster, Li Hung Chang, the United States has dictated the allies side of the deals, and they promise to bring quick and complete success. The ministers are likely to be delivered into the hands of their governments and a settlement reached on American lines. Moreover, the American troops have been in advance in the march on Peking. In the fighting as well as the negotiating the United States has won glory in the Chinese campaign.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Mother of the Immigrants.

"Probably no two women in America come so close to a varied personal history as Mrs. Regina Stucklen, chief inspector of the women's department of the Barge office, and well known as the Mother of the Immigrants, and her assistant, Miss Taylor. No church in all the metropolis solemnizes so many marriages as the Barge office, and no matrimonial agent on earth arranges so many weddings as does Mrs. Stucklen, and beneath the majority of these there is a saving proportion of romance that leaveneth the whole heavy lump, thus there are compensations even in the most arduous tasks and amid surroundings that are repellent to a refined feminine mind.

"Generally, with great humanity and with signal absence of official fussiness, Mrs. Stucklen regards the wants of all the women. She learns not only whence each comes, but whither each wishes to go and what each purposes to do. Of the struggles with the great problems of existence in all countries and in all grades of social life, Mrs. Stucklen knows enough to fill volumes. The Mother of the Immigrants is a woman of strong personality, calm, firm and sympathetic under most trying situations, and to the would-be bride, who has arrived a stranger in a foreign land to meet her promised husband, she is at once counselor, witness and friend. As about three hundred marriages take place annually at the Barge office, or directly under its auspices, one solemnization for every working day of the year—and as Mrs. Stucklen inquires into the intimate history of each matrimonial affair, she has more than an ordinary opportunity to study this interesting side of life. Whither they go and how they prosper after leaving her guardian care, the inspector has little opportunity of knowing—whether to found honorable and prosperous families or to fall and fill the pauper's grave. Barely one per cent of them ever retains enough grateful memory of her services to inform her. But there are rewards in knowing one's duty well done, and if there is a seeming ingratitude on the part of the brides and grooms alike, it is because the government and the Barge office as one of its institutions, is a thing of odium to the average immigrant—the thing from which he fled when he forsook his native hills and valleys; and the sorrows and tribulations of the detention pens the immigrant seeks to blot from his memory as speedily as possible."—(John Gilmer Speed in Ainslee's.

Barge Office Tragedies.

"Barge office desertions are painfully common. Too often men allow their wives and children to come to America where they expect to be received with open arms, and the latter discover that the husband and father has, in the interval, attached himself to mettle more attractive, and the deserted ones are deported. Like cases occur with the aged, and these are truly pitiable. When the old people become a burden to the children in Europe, they are sent, with scant ceremony, to their children here. The latter are perhaps too selfish to have regard for the old folks, and too often they are deported, perhaps only to be shuttlecocked back again within a few months. One old woman was shuttlecocked across four times within a year, buffeted out on both sides of the water, and died at sea, homeless and friendless, with children in both continents prosperous and well able to make her declining years at least peaceful and calm."—(From Ainslee's Magazine.

Bishop Charles Fowler on the Great American

For two hours and 20 minutes 1,000 people, now with hearts wrung with sadness and eyes dimmed with tears, now with pulses throbbing with patriotism now with sides shaking with laughter and now with throats giving vent to cheers and hands breaking out into applause which could not be suppressed—this is the story of the lecture on "Abraham Lincoln," delivered by Bishop Charles Fowler at the Temple theater last night.

The lecture was a magnificent oratorical effect such as has never been surpassed upon the lecture platform in this city, and the speaker held the close attention of the large audience from his first sentence to the grand climax of his masterly portrayal of the matchless character of the great American. The lecture was punctuated with frequent and tremendous applause, cheers echoing throughout the building at several points.

Mayor John R. Robinson introduced the lecturer and in his introductory remarks stated that the splendid audience present was an evidence that the spirit of Lincoln still lives. He made a few remarks appropriate to the occasion and closed by introducing "Bishop Fowler of the United States."

Bishop Fowler stepped to the front of the platform and after the applause which greeted him had subsided, began his lecture. His voice was smooth and pleasant to the ear and could be heard with distinctness in all parts of the building. His platform manner was at times majestic and at all times forcible and expressive. From the standpoint of eloquence the lecture has never been surpassed in this city. For the greater part of the time the speaker confined himself almost entirely to the plain facts of history, welded together into an interesting and easily flowing thesis, which displayed a wonderful ingenuity of expression and oratorical ability. At times the great platform orator, as to the might of his power in the description of various traits of character in the life of the great American and at all times he carried his audience along with him and swayed it into different emotions according as he was discussing one or another side of the man's life.

In [illegible] his lecture, the bishop said:

"God's prophets have the right of [illegible] Mankind will never forget Abraham. Mankind will never forget Pericles, St. Paul, Richelieu, Cromwell or Washington. Mankind will never forget the here we add to the company, Abraham Lincoln. Lincoln," he said, "combined the faith of Abraham, the leadership of Moses, the statesmanship of Pericles, the intellect and power of St. Paul, the sagacity of Richelieu and the patriotism of Washington."

Continuing, the speaker said: "We must measure Lincoln as a building, from the ground up," and following out this plan he went on to show the growth in the life and character of the great man from the beginning. He portrayed the poverty of his early surroundings, which he said was not the poverty of the continent, which bore the mark of the despot, nor the poverty of the great city, which left the taint of degradation; it was the poverty of the great American wilderness, which leaves no taint or scar. This poverty, he said, limited Lincoln on every side. It limited his schooling to six months in a school-building, and limited his library to six volumes, chief among which was the Bible. But the limiting of his library was probably one of the best things that could have happened to him, for it made him the associate of good books. Third, he [illegible] of him, and poverty of his library was the wealth of his manhood." The peculiarity of Lincoln's dreams and the humanity of his appearance, along with certain habits, were illustrated by story and anecdote as well as described with eloquence.

Continuing, Bishop Fowler said that Lincoln had a great body. His strength was almost preternatural and won many distinctions for him all through his life. In this connection the bishop said: "Nature, seeing what manner of things this man must go through and suffer made him out of the best material," and in closing this part of the lecture the orator held his audience breathless through a wonderful description of Lincoln's physical stature as being typical of his moral stature and in which he likened the Rail Splitter to an oak in the forest which has grown from strength to strength until in the teeth of the tempest it stands firm with boughs bending to earth like the bow and springing back like the arrow.

The lecturer said that Lincoln must be considered in relation to his times and the circumstances which surrounded him, and then went on to show the various difficulties which confronted Lincoln in solving the questions of the time.

Making a diversion at this point, and while speaking of Virginia in connection with the south and the times preceding the war, Bishop Fowler said: "Virginia was formerly called the mother of presidents. For my part I bless God that the mantle of Virginia has fallen on Ohio."

After showing the various complexions of the trouble with the south and the sensitive nature of the south, the lecturer said the people thought Lincoln was slow, but the fact was he was leagues and leagues ahead of the people who were with him. In discussing the war Bishop Fowler spoke in the highest terms of the courage and bravery of the southerners and stated that although he along with all others had hatred in his heart in those days the sight of the grandson of General Grant and the great grand nephew of General Lee marching side by side against a common foe had dispelled those feelings.

He then outlined the difficulties confronting the president at the time that he took up the reins of government, with the sinews of war cut, the navy unseaworthy or out of immediate reach, the army scattered and the credit of the treasury ruined. He showed how Lincoln had to settle all the questions that came up and did settle them. He then showed what a great organization the confederacy was and the power that was behind it. It was not known at the time what the confederacy really amounted to but we know now. Against this great organization he said "we set the Rail Splitter," and so patiently did he watch, and so prudently did he speak and so bravely did he plan that in four years he had completely wiped out the confederacy and brought the south at his feet in amazement. Lincoln was not mistaken when he said, "the contract awarded to me on November 6, 1860, was a big job." We did not go down south on a pleasure excursion. It was far and away the biggest task ever given to a man in the annals of history. Let us look at the man who performed this great task.

"Lincoln was like a sphere. He projected farthest in every direction. His greatness began in the [illegible] mighty mixed the mud. It was not foul mud that he was made of. The fundamental question with Lincoln was 'What is right?' Then his strength consisted in his power of reasoning. He was not a man to jump at conclusions. He tested his premise, put his foot on them and then straightened up on them to stay. The next element in his greatness was his common sense. These are the three points through which the circle of his majestic character was drawn. Had he lacked any one of them he would have gone down in ruin, but possessing all, he was Abraham Lincoln!"

The lecturer then discussed Lincoln as an orator, saying that as a speaker "Mr. Lincoln stands in the fore-front with absolutely no one of record ahead of him." He then spoke of some of Lincoln's great speeches. The next phase of the great American's life taken up was his diplomacy and it was finely illustrated with anecdote. The second inaugural address, said the bishop, "had the strength of the decalogue and the [illegible] of the gospel." He then spoke of Lincoln's political sagacity. He laid great stress on the fact that Lincoln was [illegible] when he went to Washington to be president and would not be dictated to. This point was finely illustrated. Lincoln's greatness in his ability to stand alone was also magnificently portrayed by the bishop. One of the thrilling parts of the lecture was when the bishop described the scene of Lincoln's nomination at Chicago.

The latter part of the lecture was devoted to showing the Christian side of Lincoln's life. The bishop said, "I hold up Abraham Lincoln as the best specimen of the Christian man I have ever encountered in public life." He showed how Lincoln was a man of prayer and he ascribed the great victories of the war to the "long watcher at the white house" wrestling with God in prayer. In this connection, the bishop said, "I expect to see the King of Glory, but if I see Abe Lincoln's form anywhere about I will know that I am in the right company."

In closing, the bishop drew from the depths of his eloquence and in a grand peroration recapitulated the points of greatness in the life of the great American, closing with the following: "With malice toward none and with charity to all, he towers above every mere man for 6,000 years."

The close of the lecture was marked by tremendous applause.

The Upside Down House.

The house topsy-turvy is one of the oddities described by Grace W. Curran in an article in the September St. Nicholas entitled "Play-Houses at the Paris Exposition."

"Not far from Old Paris, in the Rue de Paris, a street crowded with concert-halls, burlesque spectacles, cafes, and the many attractions and distractions of modern Parisian life, one comes unexpectedly upon the amazing Upside-Down House or Manoir a l'Envers. Did some great giant stride through the avenues of the exposition in the dead of night, and, thinking to play a joke on the world, pick up this stone castle, and set it upside down upon its chimneys and towers? At any rate, here it stands, the Gothic arches of its windows pointing downward, its sculptures, coat of arms, clock, flags, all in the same absurd position, while through an open window we catch a glimpse of a room whose chairs and tables cling to the ceiling, and waiters with their heads downward in the air move about, bearing trays of eatables turned upside down to upside-down patrons sitting at the upside-down tables. Has the law of gravitation been suddenly suspended to benefit the projectors of the Paris exposition? We cannot resist the temptation to enter and go up, or is it down? the winding staircase in the tower. Above, we find the various rooms of a private mansion, a drawing-room, bedroom, and even bath-room, all the contents of which follow the strange law of this strange house.

We discover, before long, that much is due to a clever arrangement of mirrors, while other curious mirrors, convex, concave, and variously curved, show us objects in surprising and distorting shapes and attitudes.

BUTTONHOLE INTERVIEWS

"I don't want you to go and quote me in the paper," said a prominent Democrat at the convention yesterday, "but I want to call your attention to one peculiar thing about the present campaign. The Republicans are talking more about Roosevelt than they are about McKinley, and the Democrats are saying nothing about their vice presidential candidate. In the whole convention today the name of Stevenson has not been uttered and there has been only one campaign button in the house that had his picture upon it. That one button showing both the Democratic candidates was worn by Mr. T. B. Fyles, the secretary."

"May I have that Bryan button that you have?" said a Gazette man to a Populist the other day. "I know some one who wants one."

"No," said the Populist, "you cannot have this one, but I'll get you another. This one and all the rest of the pocket full of them that I have are very dark prints. I have been picking over the box of them up in Henry C. Hall's office and have a pocket full of dark ones. We are going to give them away down in the south end of the city to the colored people. Half of them when they see these dark buttons think that Bryan is a nigger."

Brakeman Victim of Frightful Accident

At 8:15 last night W. B. Witty, a brakeman in the employ of the Colorado and Southern railroad, was the victim of a terrible accident at Fountain as a result of which he lost both legs. He was run over by a locomotive and amputation was necessary and the physicians state that there is little chance of his living.

The train was a freight, leaving Pueblo at 5:10 and due in this city at 9:20. It was a double header and there was also a pusher locomotive and it was to the crew of the latter that Mr. Witty belonged. As the train was slowing up to take water, Witty, who was setting the brakes in front of the pusher, fell to the track in front of the engine and was run over. The wheels passed over both of his legs above the knees.

He was brought to Colorado Springs on the caboose which was detached from the train and brought to this city by one engine. The run was made in about twenty minutes, the accident occurring at 8:35 and the train arriving here at 9:0.

Drs. Campbell and Spicer had him removed from the car to St. Francis hospital where they performed the amputation of both his legs. They stated at a late hour last night that there was practically no chance for him to live. His home is in Denver where he has a wife and one child.

Institute Opens for Another School Year

The Colorado Springs School for the Deaf and Blind opened yesterday under very auspicious circumstances. Supt. Argo and all the teachers are on hand and Mr. Argo is very much pleased at the indications of the first day.

The enrollment of pupils yesterday was probably the largest ever known on an opening day in the history of the school. The number of pupils who reported yesterday was 110, and Mr. Argo thinks the school will have an enrollment of 150 when they all get in. He is very much pleased with the class of pupils he has this year.

The pupils are not all from this state, though the greater part of them are, but a number have come from other states. The state superintendent of instruction of Idaho, Miss Principal Freeman, has sent 11 children to Mr. Argo. Four others come from Wyoming and one each from Nebraska and New Mexico. The attendence of pupils from other states speaks well of the standing of the Colorado institution throughout the country.

RUMOR SAYS LOCAL ELKS ARE LIKELY TO WIN OUT

The following is quoted from the Harrisburg, Pa., Evening Telegraph of Aug. 27. It will be of interest to Colorado Springs people as coming from headquarters and being the best straw that has yet been observed showing which way the wind is blowing on the Elks' home project:

"Mr. and Mrs. Meade D. Detweiler and family have left Richfield Springs, N. Y., for Atlantic City, where they will remain for some time. Mr. Detweiler was in Boston on Saturday attending a meeting of the National Elks' Home committee, of which he was appointed chairman by the new grand exalted ruler, Judge J. E. Fisher. Mr. Detweiler will have full charge of the purchasing of the site and the erecting of the Elks' home, which will cost $100,000. Several sites have been offered, all of which will be visited by the committee, but it is thought Colorado Springs will get the home, as there are beautiful grounds there and the climate is considered the finest in the world."

SUPERS WANTED AT THE OPERA HOUSE

Thirty young men and ten women can find employment next Tuesday afternoon at the opera house if they will apply to the stage manager Tuesday afternoon at the stage door. They are needed for supernumeraries in the Henry Miller production of "The Only Way."

This is one of the largest companies that has ever been seen in this city and in addition a large number of "supes" are employed in each town. The company brings its own scenery for the production and it takes two cars to do it.

The sale of seats is large already and one of the greatest audiences of the season is anticipated.

Henry Miller has a well defined and comprehensive view of the theatrical business as associated with "dramatic art." In a recent interview he said:

"Theaters, that is, the running of them—is much like keeping shop. Your average manager doesn't care a picayune for art. What he wants is to give the people the sort of goods that he thinks they want. "Just as broadcloth gowns may be the fashion one year and Scotch plaid goods the next, so plays certain kinds, I mean come into fashion. One manager puts on a costume play and it makes a hit. 'Oh,' cry the managers, 'what the people want are certain plays' and we have a deluge of them. Does a [illegible] dream succeed, lo! a full score of others follow in its train. If one war play successful and behold, you hear the martial beat of drums on the stage for a couple of years afterward. Then comes sin, and its inevitable concomitant, a change. Which reminds me that about ten years ago the stage started to be in the throes of the inane farce comedy. People held up their hands in horror and murmured to each other: 'What is the poor, degenerate stage coming to?' But they forgot one very vital point and that is this no matter how exceedingly depraved the popular taste, there always remains a goodly quality of people the judicious few, if you will—who will patronize what is good. These and what time on the stage people who seek the elevating influence of the theater and who have no time for the meretricious or the [illegible] in every community this judicious few obtain and one good wholesome play, or no actor nor actress of ability, but will be accorded due recognition, no matter how great the need of transient patronage that the unthinking may bestow on the fresh of the stage. Thus Irving and Melba are always sure of their following—no matter what the fashion in plays or how crowded the other theaters."

Civilizing Alaska.

"In Alaska, the entire work of education is under the direction of the United States Bureau of Education.

"Alaska is a big rock covering 400,000 square miles, that is covered with moss in the most barren places. It is the kind of moss that the reindeer eat. The human being can live on moss, also, but it is better to have the reindeer eat the moss and provide man with meat and milk.

"In the work of education in Alaska the object has been to prepare the natives to take up the industries and modes of life of the states, and to induce them to abandon their ancient tribal customs. It had been obvious from the beginning of the government subsidies in 1885-86 that there should be not only education in the elementary branches, but also a training in the employments of civilized life. From the first all the missions established by different religious denominations there was instruction in cooking, housekeeping and clothes-making. Then followed more careful education in the trades of carpentering, blacksmithing and shoemaking, under the direction of the Bureau of Education, which subsidized for this purpose the Presbyterian Industrial school at Sitka. It was believed that if the natives of Alaska could be taught to use the English language, be brought under Christian influence by the missionaries and be trained in suitable forms of industry, the increasing white population of Alaska, composed of immigrants from the states, would be able to employ them in mining, transportation and the production of food. It was found, however, that in order to reach the thousands of primitive inhabitants of Alaska, something entirely out of the ordinary in educational methods must [illegible] a beginning. The idea of introducing herds of reindeer and of persuading the natives to care for them was first considered in 1891. This plan was suggested by Dr. Sheldon Jackson and Captain Healy, of the United States revenue cutter Bear. Forty thousand natives engaged in reindeer herding and transportation would not only be brought a step further toward civilization, but would furnish the conting-at needed to make possible the mining industry. After four years of experiments it became certain that this project would prove a success."—(Dr. W. T. Harris in Atlantic Monthly.

OFFICIAL ISABELLA INFORMATION

Quarterly Dividend to Be Paid--Regular Shipments of Low Grade Ore Being Marketed.

The cynosure of the mining world is Isabella.

This stock is always ready to spring a sensation and the recent decline from $1.36 of a few short weeks ago to $1.00 yesterday was a "drop" worth of motion.

Reports, some reliable, but mostly unfounded, have been appearing from time to time in various newspapers, and as the majority of these were of a bearish tone the stock was gradually pounded down.

These reports contained tales of recapitalization, consolidation with lesser companies and other discouraging accounts. A gentleman intimately connected with the affairs of the Isabella company spoke this morning and gave a clear, concise summary of the true status of matters. "It is superfluous to deny the consolidation stories as both Mr. Aldrich of the Hart company and a director of our company have already delivered their announcements that there was no deal of this sort whatever.

"It is all very true that we are now shipping from the rich Isabella vein, and though we are extracting a great deal of ore, this is all of a medium or low grade. We are cross-cutting for the vein at the twelfth level and should an ore body be opened up similar to what we have already found in the upper levels, the company would be again one of the market's favorites.

"The ore which is now being sent out is from the upper levels altogether, and though they pay their own expenses the enormous expenditures occasioned by development purposes is necessarily defrayed by the treasury reserve. The "dead" or development work in progress in the Isabella is probably more extensive than any other mine in Cripple Creek and the pay roll and other necessities are heavy drains on our income.

"On Monday next the directors convene and the quarterly dividend will be discussed. I assure you that one will be paid, but whether it is a 3-cent rate as usual, I cannot say.

"The stories concerning the dividend cash reserve are unfounded as we are perfectly safe in distributing a liberal dividend, though the present outlook is not as favorable as at other times of the mine's history. The maneuvers of the stock can be wholly attributed to the manipulations of local brokers as the recent developments in the property are not of sufficient moment to knock down the value of the stock as much as dollar Isabella indicates."

STRATTON'S INDEPENDENCE

The Stock Is Selling $13 Ex-Dividend--More Ore in Sight in the Mine Than Ever Before.

As the world moves round the press and public of Colorado comments upon this and that stock which is called to its attention. Independence, Portland, Million Consolidated, Isabella and others have lately divided the attention of the public and now a good many seem to be inclined to be up and doing about Stratton's Independence.

Unfortunately the comment about the great mine has not been of the most favorable description, but what is more unfortunate still a good deal of the criticism about the mine is wholly incorrect and leads to entirely wrong conclusions.

The principal complaint uttered is due to the report circulated to the effect that development work has not been kept up in the property which is intended to show that the mine is being what is generally termed "gutted." All of this is not true, not true at all, as a very large amount of development has been done in the mine and we have Mr. T. A. Rickard's word for it that there is today more ore in sight than when it was first purchased in Great Britain. When he reported upon the property his report gave it out that there was about $7,000,000 in sight with the possibilities of there being $8,000,000.

The development of the property has shown that these reports were entirely conservative as after a heavy production for about 18 months we are told on the very best authority that there is more in sight than ever before.

The English investing public has gone into this stock and slowly and carefully. They have looked before they leaped, as it were, and they have not leaped yet, but they are paying £3 for the stock today ex-dividend, and that is the best the shares have ever done. The company has paid its shareholders about $2,500,000 in dividends and gives promise of continuing at this rate for a long time to come.

It is true that the main shaft has not been put down deeper since Mr. Stratton sold the property, but there is an enormous amount of lateral prospecting and development to be done yet before a deeper shaft will be necessary and it must be remembered that this much cheaper to lift ore, waste and water from a depth of 1,000 feet than 2,000. It is true, too, that there has been a change in the management of the mine and this probably is the reason for many of the unfair statements that have been made about the property quite lately. But there is nothing to them.

ACACIA'S GREAT RICHES

In the Third Level Eight Feet of Ore Averages Close to Five Ounces --Bankers Leasing Company Resumes Work on Morning Star Claim.

The ore in the third level of the Wrockloff lease is eight and a half feet wide throughout much of the length of the shoot and averages without sorting—from wall to wall—close to five ounces.

This ore body will be cut on the fourth level by or before next Monday if no delay occurs, and if found as good there as above will show a value of fully half a million in sight. Wrockloff himself regards his lease of immense and permanent value and is protecting himself against any danger of losing it by pushing his bonded development ahead of time to be secure. By the 15th current he expects to have this finished and then be able to put all three of his power drills to breaking ore. His output now is but 10 tons a day but this means $1,000 a day.

The Robinson lease is looking well and appears to be coming into a big ore body. This is also of the Burns claim, west of the Wrockloff lease. The Brady lease is keeping up its licks in the old steady fashion with an average output of 10 tons a day.

The Bankers' Leasing company, operating the Morning Star of the Acacia company, has resumed work again after rebuilding its engine house, destroyed by fire a few weeks ago, and there is hope of big things from that property in the near future.

NEARING THE BASALT DYKE

On Little Cut Diamond--100 Foot Cross-Cut Already Run from the 150 Foot Level.

On the Cut Diamond claim, on the southeast slope of Bull hill, the cross-cut from the 150-foot level has progressed 100 feet. This cross-cut has been in an easterly direction and its object has been to encounter a great basalt dyke, which is said to cross the claim lengthwise and along which pay values will probably be found. Stringers of quartz are constantly met with in this vein and these seams indicate an immediate presence of the dyke and there is great encouragement felt that the stringers also portend an ore deposit. The dyke is believed to emanate from the huge crest of Bull hill, where the Vindicator, Little and Christmas mines are located, and as the Cut Diamond lies further down the hill, it is hoped that ore will be encountered at a more shallow depth than in any of the above-named mines. The Cut Diamond is owned by the Little Cut Diamond company and the claim consists of six acres, though the mineral rights of four of these acres are possessed by the Gold Knob company. The workings are on the company's account and are situated on the northern end of the claim, not very far distant from the Vindicator end line. The company's treasury is in very good condition, and will enable a thorough development of the property. In addition to the Cut Diamond, the company owns three claims on Big Bull mountain, for which United States patents have recently been received.

C. C. COLUMBIA'S VEIN

Word came down from camp yesterday afternoon and was generally circulated about the city, that the Tillery vein had been cut in the workings of the Cripple Creek Columbia, and that the vein was barren. The latter important qualification was responsible for sending the stock off fractionally in the afternoon call, at a time when a sudden advance was not unexpected.

The information could not be verified at the offices of the leasing company, where a sentiment seemed to be in great favor, but from another source which can be relied upon as being authentic, it was learned that at a distance of 22 feet from the shaft on the 340-foot level, which is just two feet beyond the point where the cross-cut was at the time when the Gazette procured its information published yesterday morning, a vein had been cut, but the cross-cut had not penetrated it far enough to disclose its true character. Indeed it was only the encountering of some green tellurium, usually indicative of a vein on Beacon hill, that started the report that the Tillery vein had been cut. The disclosures of the cross-cut during the next two days will be looked for with interest.

ACTIVITY ON PAPPOOSE

Active development work is being prosecuted on the Guess claim of the Pappoose Gold Mining company by the Atahualpa Leasing company, which has been working the property for several weeks past.

In the Squaw Mountain tunnel, which at the point from which the work is being carried on, is 400 feet below the surface, the leasing company has cut a large station and sunk a shaft to the depth of about 70 feet. The sinking has been on a well-defined vein all the way, which varies in width from eight inches to four feet, and values have been consistently encouraging all the way down.

The vein upon which the company is sinking is not, as some suppose, the Santa Rita vein, although so far as it has been explored, it resembles very closely the appearance of the Santa Rita vein at a corresponding depth. The shaft will be put down 200 feet deeper at once, which will then make it over 500 feet beneath the surface, therefore giving the leasing company at great a depth as that which the Santa Rita people had when they opened their bonanza ore.

A full plant of machinery is in operation on the property, and some ore is being hoisted high along, although only as little as need be in order to put down the shaft. Before the first of next month the shaft is expected to be down 50 feet more, at which depth a drift will be run on the vein in order to get the benefit of a wider exploration of the ore shaft than is being obtained now from the mere sinking of the shaft.

REORGANIZATION OF VICTOR

The Victor Gold Mining company, one of the oldest in the camp, will be reorganized, something after the manner, it is understood, of the reorganization of the Anaconda company.

For a long time the affairs of this company have been in a very unhealthy condition. Following upon the loss of ore shoots in the property, the financial condition of the company soon deteriorated, until the suspension of dividends became imperative and ever since the Victor has been generally spoken of as a dead letter in Cripple Creek mining.

But all the while more or less development was being prosecuted in the mine, and, although this has placed the company in a worse than bankrupt condition, it is understood that the work has warranted some well-known mining men to attempt the complete reorganization of the company, hoping to thus put it on a sound basis, from which the mine might again be profitably worked in fact with the same motives that inspired the resuscitation of the Anaconda company.

Another coincidence between the situations of the two companies is that David H. Moffat holds notes of the Victor company to the amount of $163,616.66, payable on demand, and the information has just transpired that default and judgment has been taken against the Victor company for that amount.

The stock of the Victor company is widely scattered; probably no Cripple Creek mining company has such distant and separated shareholders. A considerable quantity of the stock is held in France, and because of the fact that all this stock was placed at a very high figure upon the promise of continuous dividends, and the subsequent suspension of those dividends, Cripple Creek has suffered an unjust condemnation in France, especially, for some time.

The fact that the stockholders are so widely scattered will mean that some of them may be missed in the attempt to locate all of them, that each one may have an equal privilege of coming in on the new deal, and others may be adverse to any further outlay with the company, but every effort will be made to locate them all, and to persuade them of the advantage of coming in on the reorganization.

COLORADO BOOM IN DEADWOOD

Special to the Gazette:

Deadwood, S. D., Sept. 5.—John K. Vanatta, of Colorado Springs, Colo., who is president of the Spearfish Gold Mining company of that city, has been in Deadwood several days looking over the interests of his company. The Spearfish company was organized to work 365 acres of ground in the Ragged Top district, upon which a large amount of low grade ore has been encountered. The company has nearly completed a large cyanide plant and within three months of the time the company was organized, it will be milling ore. In an interview, Mr. Vanatta said:

"The Black hills people do not realize fully what is coming. When a cyclone comes, people prepare for it if they have the proper warning. The Black hills people have been warned and repeatedly warned to look out for a Colorado boom. When a Colorado boom strikes a mining country it is worse than a cyclone in its stirring effects. Everything, in my mind, is now ready and ripe for a boom in the Black hills. I find everything open for our Colorado people. We are wanted by most of the enterprising men of the hills and we are going to come away, whether we are invited or not. In the Spearfish Mining company I believe that there is not such a proposition to be found in the west. There are thousands of tons of cyaniding ore in sight, that only needs to be broken to be taken directly to our new cyanide plant. The extraction on the ore is high and the general average of the ore is good enough to make the proposition a winner.

"I notice in the market of Deadwood fruit of different kinds from Grand Junction, Colo. If these fruit growers of my state can compete with eastern concerns, with the odds of long distances by rail, what will they be able to do when the Burlington road is completed and direct communication is given between Colorado points and the Black hills?

"Like a great many other Coloradoans I believe that the Black hills will be the next mining country that will be opened up."

Mr. Vanatta is accompanied by his wife.

MINING NOTES AROUND TOWN

Vickers and Miller, trustees, leasing on the northern part of the Bonnie Nell claim, on Raven hill, have commenced active work and will sink 25 feet directly. These lessees recently bought out what was known as the Lohr lease, but instead of having the old contract transferred to them, a new one was made out, stipulating for more work than had been required of Lohr. The new lease was made out for 18 months and called for 90 shifts a month, the work to be expended in sinking the shaft from its present depth of 125 feet, to the 250-foot point, this sinking to be done within six months. Vickers and Miller are backed by considerable Denver capital, and the good indications which Lohr encountered will be followed up energetically.

NEW DEVELOPMENTS ON DANTE.

Inactivity on the Dante property is soon to be ended and most earnest developments will be instituted when a Pittsburg syndicate in connection with Lessee Babbit, will sink the shaft to a depth of 800 feet and there prospect for a continuation of the valuable ore bodies which brought the company into prominence a year or so ago. The shaft is already down 450 feet and when this additional depth is attained the mine will be in splendid condition to mine advantageously. The estimated cost of this continued shaft will be $10,000, and as there is a large capital behind the syndicate this outlay will be a trifle. The Dante lies along a breccia dyke, which crosses the claim lengthwise. The vein at one point did not prove of great permanence and this increased depth is of the greatest advantage to the company.

SIX POINTS' SALE RATIFIED.

At a meeting of the stockholders of the Six Points G. M. Co. yesterday the sale of the Six Points claim was easily ratified and the directors have declared a dividend which will be immediately disbursed. The total is $120,000 and about 12 cents a share will be received by each stockholder. The claim said is on Bull hill, admirably located in the midst of the following well known mines: Last Dollar, Lucky Guss and Union. It is freely rumored that the actual purchaser of the property was W. S. Stratton.

BATTLE MOUNTAIN CLAIM SOLD TO COMMONWEALTH.

There has been a two-acre claim on Battle mountain, lying between the Clyde claim and the Rizi group and for a long time this fraction has been in dispute. The Commonwealth G. M. Co. has come to the rescue and has purchased the claim for $9,000, which sum has already been paid over. The Commonwealth company will at once start active work on the property, and as it is in a very fine location the claim is a splendid acquisition to the company. The Commonwealth is a very recent flotation and owns a great deal of valuable property in producing sections of the camp.

BUCKHORN BOOKS CLOSED YESTERDAY.

Books closed yesterday prior to the annual meeting of the Buckhorn G. M. company, which occurs on the 10th of September. This will be of unusual importance, as the sale of the Whipsnoer will claim for $15,000 will be ratified. The recapitalization of the company will be considered and other items of equal interest will be discussed. Surveyors are engaged on the Grass claim on Bull hill, and as soon as surveys are completed work will be started on this property.

EL PASO SHAFT DOWN 450 FEET.

The El Paso shaft has now attained a depth of 450 feet and is being sunk as rapidly as possible. It was the intention of the management to continue the shaft to 640 feet before cross-cutting, but there is every indication that a vein will be encountered in the shaft in which event these plans would be interrupted as veins in this locality are always conducive to a tremendous flow of water and it would be necessary to install pumps and drift on the vein rather than sink further.

GOLDFIELD NOT USE LILLIE SHAFT IMMEDIATELY.

It is not probable that the Goldfield company will be able to use the Lillie shaft for mining purposes for some time, though the management of the larger company has expressed a sanction for this course as soon as it would be practical. The Lillie workings are among the busiest in the camp. Not alone the company has it in mind, but it is above the fourth level occupy the shaft in their work and the machinery is never idle.

SMITH LEASE A GOOD ONE.

That the Smith lease on the Elizabeth Cooper has encountered a rich vein on the southern end of the claim is proved beyond a doubt and is showing up even better than the company's workings on the Doctor vein. Another shipment has left this lease and consisted of 32 tons. The exact value of the ore was $68.40 a ton.

UNUSUAL ACTIVITY ON STRAUB MOUNTAIN.

There is very gratifying work in progress on Straub mountain, notably, the Lagrobe company, whose shaft is already down 550 feet and will be sunk even to a greater depth. On the Lorena, in the same locality, Lessee Tanner is cross-cutting from the 50-foot level and expects to cut the vein which was opened up on the surface. The showing on this property is probably the most promising of any of the Straub mountain workings.

THE TRUE POSITION OF THE DEMOCATIC PARTY

In the Campaign as to the Philippine Islands as Stated by a Bryan Democrat—Mr. Bryan Did Not Follow Democratic Precedent or Policy in Getting Treaty Ratified.

Written for the Gazette by J. D. SHEWALTER.

Differing with you on this subject and the views you have expressed, though not altogether, I am induced by the skill and ability which you have displayed in maintaining the position of the Republican party, to write this article for the Gazette. Much irrelevant matter has been injected into the discussion, and much confusion exists as to the real position of the Democratic party. This is not surprising, since, in addition to the usual misrepresentation, always incident to every campaign, and which is confined to no political party, we have the further fact that the position of some of the Democratic leaders has not been consistent.

The territorial question is not a new one, and to a clear understanding of the Democratic position, it is necessary to refer to this question in the past. It arose first on the purchase of the Louisiana territory from France. It was then (1803) claimed by the Federalist party, that there was no power in congress to acquire new or additional territory, that the third clause of the fourth article of the Constitution, in reference to admitting new states, formed out of the territories, applied alone to the territory then existing or owned by the United States. In the Federal convention, the history of this clause will show, and as in fact its entire provisions in connection with the history of the times, would seem to indicate it had in view alone the northwestern territory ceded by Virginia, Vermont claimed by New York and the territory claimed by South Carolina and Georgia which latter claims were never admitted as valid, hence the claim as to the right or claim of the United States. It is true that Gouverneur Morris wrote this clause, and offered it as an amendment just as it stands, but no such object or purpose was ever disclosed as stated in his subsequent letter which you published, and the word "provinces" as therein used, is doubtless employed as synonymous with territory. The Democratic party contended, that under the treaty and war power, the United States might acquire either or additional territory, for the purpose at some future date of admitting new states, under the said article in reference thereto, to be carved or formed out of such territory so acquired. The president and senate adopted this view, by negotiating and ratifying the Louisiana treaty. Congress afterwards adopted the same views, as to the rights of the United States in the matter, by admitting new states, which formed a part of the Louisiana purchase. Thus did it become firmly established, as an article of Democratic faith, or as a construction of the Constitution by that party, that the United States might acquire new territory by treaty, cession or conquest under the war power, for the purpose of forming new states out of the same. This view was taken in the purchase subsequently of Florida and the territory we obtained from Mexico, which latter was derived by treaty and conquest.

But the old Federalist party, the Northern Whigs, and the Republican party in their earlier days, or at least the prominent men who afterwards formed that party, contended that no such power existed. Afterwards under the administration of General Grant, the Republican party came to adopt the Democratic view, and under President Grant's administration acquired, by treaty Alaska—though this action was opposed by some individual Republicans as Sumner and others, but this arose principally through their opposition to President Grant's administration. Thus matters stood up until the war with Spain. Both parties were committed to the doctrine, that congress had the Constitutional power, both under the treaty and war power, to acquire additional territory either by treaty or by conquest.

But both were agreed, that it was such continuous territory as was desirable, as homes for our own people, and of finally being erected into states, and admitted into the Union on an equality with the other states. The Democratic party also admitted that the doctrine extended to the near-by islands, and repeatedly declared in favor of the purchase of Cuba, whilst the Republican party, in fact did acquire, and for the same reason, Hawaii, so that whatever the former difference of opinion that may have existed, the Constitution, at the time of the Spanish war, had received a settled construction, by the action of both parties, and the authoritative action of the executive and legislative branches of the government.

At the conclusion of this war an entirely new question arose, out of the treaty. The president, in which he was sustained by almost the entire Republican party in congress, contended that the right to acquire territory, in either of the modes referred to, extended also to distant islands and countries. That is, that the United States might acquire, by treaty or conquest, islands in the archipelago, seven thousand miles distant and which, owing to their situation and the character of their inhabitants, could never become states in the Union. The senate under our form of government is the real and responsible treaty making power. The first draft of the Constitution lodged it there alone and it was only changed to its present form, because the senate had no agency by which to negotiate in the first instance, and might not be in session when it was desirable to do so. So the compromise was adopted, giving one-third of the senators present a negative and also provided that the senate should not only "assent to" a treaty, but in the first instance might "advise" the president to negotiate.

The Democratic party in the Senate was at first almost unanimously opposed to the treaty. The present nominee of the Democratic party, however, was successful in changing a sufficient number of Populist and Democratic votes, to secure the ratification by one vote more than the necessary two-thirds. Now what is the principle asserted by the ratification of this treaty? That under the war power, by conquest, and under the power to make treaties, by a treaty, the United States has the legal or Constitutional right to acquire territory to be perpetually held as such. It must be borne in mind at this point that the ratification of this treaty was after a declaration by the Senate that these islands were to be held as territories, dependencies, or provinces. This was an entirely new departure, and the assertion of a new doctrine on the part of the United States. See what vantage ground the Democratic party up to this time held in the controversy. Their position would have been unassailable. They had the necessary vote in the Senate to have defeated the ratification. Anyone could have said, there is no Constitutional power to acquire distant islands, which are not to become future states, but are to be perpetually held as territories or provinces that the ancient doctrine of both parties forbids this acquisition. And they had the number of Constitutional votes in the Senate, which would have given to this view, the force and effect of Constitutional construction by the only Constitutional power having the right to determine in the first instance, the extent of the treaty making power. For it must be admitted on all hands that one third of the states or senators present, is the only authority under our government having the power to determine, both the expediency and the legal extent to which treaties may go. But the Democratic party having now nominated Mr. Bryan, who advised and secured this ratification, have thus indorsed his position, and thus determined that, Constitutionally, the United States has the right, under both the war and treaty making power to acquire sovereignty over and ownership of the Philippines. What a vast step toward centralization! For the principle being once established that Constitutional right admitted it can easily be recalled so that as a mere matter of Constitutional right or power, the doctrine has gone forth that if for instance, in a division of China, it is desirable to do so, the Constitutional right exists on the part of the United States of acquiring a part thereof, and governing the same as a territory or province. For neither friend nor foe can suppose that Mr. Bryan and especially after the resolutions of this treaty with all of its provisions, and especially after the resolution of the Senate declaring the purpose of the government as to their future condition, without he honestly believed the Constitutional right and power existed of so acquiring these islands. To conclude otherwise, to say for one moment that Mr. Bryan should advise and secure the ratification of this treaty, believing at the same time, that there was no power to make it, would not be charged against him by anyone I take it. While some are reluctantly forced to the conclusion that he seduced senators from their plain duty by his advice, and thus lost the vast advantage, both in position and principle which the Democratic party held, no one can believe that he would deliberately advise them to do that which the United States had no Constitutional right of doing, and thus to violate their oaths of office. It therefore follows that the President having negotiated a treaty, Mr. Bryan having advised and in fact by his influence, secured its ratification, and the two political parties, each having respectively nominated these gentlemen for the presidency and thus widened their positions, have united for this campaign, in admitting the legal and Constitutional right of the United States to acquire lands by treaty and conquest. I shall vote for Mr. Bryan, but as an individual Democrat I claim, and shall ever claim, the right to deny the power and authority of Congress in this respect. I agree with Mr. Bryan that it is bad policy to hold them, but according to the Democratic faith from the beginning it is un-Democratic, as a mere matter of policy to interfere in the affairs of European and Asiatic governments by treaty or otherwise, except under the Monroe doctrine, when they get a footing on American soil, and it is equally un-Democratic, illegal and outside of the Constitution to attempt it.

What then is the issue between the two parties in the present campaign? I seek to state it plainly, since it has been confused, mystified and misunderstood. The issue is this:

First: As a question of policy what should be our future course? The Republican party says having acquired these islands by treaty with the assent and assistance of the Democrats, we will hold them and govern them, and grant to them the largest measure of liberty they are capable of enjoying consistent with our own welfare. On the other hand the Democratic party says, having gotten in to this miserable business, we propose to get out by permitting the people to establish their own form of government, protecting them for a limited period. This, I think, fairly states the issue so far as it is a question of policy. The one plan necessitates a large standing army for all time, and adopts on the part of the United States the colonial policy of England. This large army will require a hundred and twenty million dollars, to be raised by taxation annually double the annual expense of the entire administration prior to 1898. As a result it raises the question of the civil rights of the inhabitants. This is a legal question and it is in no wise affected by the other legal questions to which allusion has been made. Congress may admit new states. It is not bound to do so. The power being a discretionary one it may be granted or withheld. The territory may be governed as such, but this other legal issue, which it is necessary for the people to consider in determining how they will vote, is this: The Republican party maintains that the Constitution does not extend to the territories. The Democratic party contends that the Constitution does extend to the territories. Here is the legal question. Under the Republican theory they may be governed absolutely as congress shall determine. The Democratic party contends that in "making needful rules and regulations" it must be under and in pursuance of Constitutional authority and subject to the Constitution. As far as the writer knows, there is not a single case (with the exception of Judge Townsend's decision in New York, and the very case he cites, are in conflict with his decision) and if there are any such decisions they have not been cited by any of the great lawyers found in the ranks of the Republican party, sustaining the view of that party. This question can not be obscured by arguments to the effect that in former treaties the revenue laws were suspended for a certain number of years, for this only raises the question whether or not the treaty making power is superior or subordinate to a mere law of congress, and the executive and the senate has held it to be superior, nor can it be obscured by showing that congress has declared certain cities or ports in newly acquired territory, ports of entry and extending the revenue law to such territory. The Democratic position on the other hand is that the Constitution is the supreme law in all of the states and territories. The courts have uniformly so held. I put the following from the decision of Chief Justice Marshall in Loughborough vs. Blake 5 Wheaton 317 against all of the platforms and speeches put forth. "The power, then, to lay and collect duties throughout the United States. Does this term designate the whole or any particular portion of the American Empire? Certainly this question can admit of but one answer. It is the name given to our great Republic, which is composed of states and territories. The District of Columbia, or the territory west of the Missouri, is not less within the United States, than Maryland or Pennsylvania." Here is the unquestionable doctrine that the territories are no less a part of the United States than the states. That settled, the Constitution answers the other question. "This Constitution and the laws of the United States made in pursuance thereof . . . shall be the supreme law of the land." This "land" being according to Chief Justice Marshall not only the states but the territories also.

If then, the Constitution extends to these islands, then it follows as the night the day, that the inhabitants of these islands have all the civil rights of other American citizens, among others that of free commerce and the right to emigrate to the United States. Every citizen must cast his ballot, with a view of promoting the policy of one or the other parties; for one I am forced, reluctantly, to vote for Mr. Bryan. As he was instrumental in getting us into this business, why should he not also be given a chance to get us out? The old adage may sometimes be true, that "the hair of the dog is good for the bite." CONICAL CAVE DWELLINGS.

An Extraordinary Survival from Almost Prehistoric Times.

Prof. J. R. S. Sterrett describes in the September Century a region of Cappadocia in which, as he believes, the inhabitants have been cave-dwellers for nearly four thousand years. Many of them live in cones of stone that have been left by the washing away of the surrounding earth.

The height of the cones varies greatly, ranging perhaps from fifty to three hundred feet. The process of disintegration still continues, and in many cones the exterior wall has been worn away to such an extent that the chambers, if they lie fairly to the sun, are used for drying grapes, apricots, and other fruit, as they are safe against invasion by animals. Often the cones are almost perfect in shape, and originally all of them were crowned by caps of lava, which were the primal cause of the cone-formation. The caps maintain their position because they form one integral conglomerate made with the cone.

Sometimes the doorway gives entrance direct from the ground, but in many cones the entrance is high above the ground, in which case ingress is attained by means of two parallel rows of holes cut at regular intervals, so that one may climb to the door with hands and feet. Sometimes there are no visible means of reaching the entrance, but this is apparent rather than actual, for the process of disintegration constantly decreases the circumference of the cones, and the original ladder-holes have disappeared. If we enter the doorway of any of these cone-dwellings, we find ourselves within a spacious chamber, about whose walls niches and shelves for the storage of small household effects have been cut into the stone. The stairways leading to the upper stories are like wells or round chimneys, and one ascended to an upper story by means of ladder-holes precisely like those, which gave access to the front cave. The floors between the stories are usually thick enough to withstand any weight that might be put upon them, but occasionally the excavators miscalculated the thickness of the floor, with the result of making one lofty chamber of two or two. I counted as many as nine stories in one cone, but most have only two, three, or four stories. One can easily count the stories from the outside by means of the windows. Great numbers of the cone-dwellings are used today as dove-cotes.

A due proportion of the cones were reserved for the worship of some god, whether pagan or Christian. The period to which they belong is revealed by the imitated architecture. A cone with a pointed and Doric columns belongs clearly to the period when Greek civilization was dominant. An interior with semi-arches belongs to the Greco-Roman period. An interior which imitates the characteristic Byzantine church is clearly of Christian origin, though its date may be a matter of dispute. The interior walls of the Byzantine churches are adorned with frescos, which of course are more or less obliterated. Among them are found not merely portraits of Greek saints, each with the characteristic nimbus, but even pretentious paintings embracing a large number of figures. Some of these paintings are ancient in style, others more modern.

The native of this region, to all intents and purposes, are still troglodytes. But if we leave out of consideration the fact that their dwellings are at least partially underground, they differ in habits and customs in no whit from the ordinary Turkish villagers in ordinary, humdrum surroundings.

Suggestion of Nature.

Lucius A. Bigelow, jr. (age 5) contributes to the September St. Nicholas the following verses, for which he has received the silver badge of the St. Nicholas League:

Green grass growing 'neath our feet,
Blue space upward gaze to greet,
Birds' wings fluttering in the air,
Color, fragrance, everywhere.

Come, my brother, come away,
Though the early dawn of day
We will enjoy while singing leaves
To the haunt which nature weaves.

Health is a jewel unknown to many. Everybody admits that. Yet the people who protect their gold by burglar alarms, and lock their diamonds in a steel vault, make not the least effort to protect the jewel they declare to be priceless. Some day they find the jewel is gone, stolen by thief Dyspepsia, and they are willing to give everything to get it back.

The quickest and surest way to the recovery of lost health is by the use of that radical and rational remedy, Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. Diseases which originate in the stomach must be cured through the stomach. A host of chronic sufferers who had "doctored" for years for a liver, heart, liver or spleen, have at last found "Golden Medical Discovery" for the blood, stomach and organs of digestion and nutrition, and found a perfect cure of the hitherto intractable ailments. The most convincing evidence of the value of the "Golden Medical Discovery" is that it has cured so many people "given up" by the doctors.

There is no alcohol, cocaine, opium or other narcotic in "Golden Medical Discovery."

"I think I should be wanting in duty if I failed to let you know what Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and Favorite Prescription have done for me," writes Miss Alice Hampton, of Lexington, Ky. "I was bedfast for four weeks and could not walk a step without crutches. My mother had to dress me. My mother and physician had given up all hope of my recovery. I had taken all the medicine I could swallow and was so low that I could not retain food enough to keep me alive. I had tried all the best medicines I could hear of, but they did me no good. I had given up all hope of ever being well. I had a hacking cough, night sweats, could not sleep, was so nervous I could not bear the slightest noise, was very deaf, had ringing in my ears, had a terrible pain in my side, was so nervous I could not sit still a minute, had no appetite, was very much bloated, had a bad taste in my mouth, had a dreadful leucorrhœa, was very much emaciated, had no color in my face, was a perfect wreck. I had been sick for two years. My mother had spent hundreds of dollars with the best physicians in Lexington, but I was no better

El Paso Democracy's Fatal Frror In Playing False to Senator Leddy

"United we stand, divided we fall." The El Paso county Democratic convention was held yesterday in the Temple theater and the above was the slogan that was upon every tongue. Several times during the day the fact that in union alone was there hope was forgotten, but someone who was there to keep the way from building always reminded the forgetful one and it was given again.

SACRIFICES TO THE GOD OF FUSION.

Whether the El Paso Democracy will fare any better than its sister to the south and its elder sister in the north, remains to be seen. Pueblo county is torn in sunder because the Democrats there don't dare ask for the lieutenant governorship, state treasurership and the governorship to boot; Arapahoe Democrats are so lined up for Thomas or for Maloney that his excellency, the governor, could not leave the situation for five hours yesterday in order to make a round trip to El Paso county and use his eloquence and influence to keep the El Paso organization intact; and now the El Paso Democracy, after pulling down a Democrat from Fountain, who was named as a nominee for county commissioner and swallowing the pill that the little Populist convention across the street prescribed for that office, and after offering up on the Populist judicial altar, Mr. C. L. McKesson, a living sacrifice to the god of fusion, in the hands of which deity they believe the destiny of Democracy lies—after all these sacrifices in the interest of harmony in El Paso, the local Democracy is confronted with a situation that is not unlikely to make of it as bad a wreck as is to be found in the state.

PERSONAL AMBITION FINDS THE FRONT.

In the personal ambition of one or two men who are endeavoring to set themselves up as pilots of the Democratic ship in El Paso lies the danger to their craft. Senator M. A. Leddy, one of the men whom the Democratic party, in its independent days, picked out to honor with one of the positions of trusts which it found itself able to give to some one, a man whose influence and ability have been known for years, yesterday received a slap in the face from his party, administered by a few officeseekers and would-be party demagogues, through the unsuspecting hands of one of the senator's warmest personal friends—a slap that caused him to leave the convention ere it had become a quarter-of-an-hour old, and he was seen there no more.

Senator Leddy, as chairman of the last county convention, called yesterday's meeting to order. He had been told that "unless there was a scheme on" he was wanted for chairman. He didn't care particularly about being chairman, but to "Loo-le" Gaylord, candidate for the nomination for the legislature, who was running the preliminaries and told the senator that he was wanted for chairman, the latter had said that he saw no chance for a scheme as it was a foregone conclusion that Loo-le would be nominated for the legislature and H. H. Seldomridge for the senate.

But there was "a scheme on," and after the job had been done Loo-le sat and held his hand over his mouth so that Senator Leddy would not see that he was laughing at the way the senator had been "done." Senator Leddy would have had Mr. H. T. Miller of the firm of Gunnell, Chino & Miller made temporary chairman, but there was "a scheme on." H. H. Seldomridge and W. C. Jones and Loo-le had one. They didn't think it wise to have Senator Leddy appoint the committees or to have it done by a man next to the throne, so they got Judge Gunnell to name for the temporary chairmanship Mr. George Musser. He was nominated by Judge Gunnell, elected by acclamation and proceeded to give a carefully studied 45-minute speech. Senator Leddy handed the gavel over to Mr. Musser and then proceeded to go down town. He did not return to the convention.

Judge Gunnell, when he found that he had been used to "do" his friends, proceeded to hunt him up and express his regret and upon the reconvening of the convention, Loo-le et al having decided that a mistake had been made, H. H. Seldomridge moved that Judge Miller be made permanent chairman and Musser stepped down. Loo-le et al didn't care much. They were through with Musser anyway.

TREMENDOUS CROWD TO HEAR THOMAS.

Gov. Thomas was not there, and it is exceedingly doubtful if he will ever again be invited to come here for a political speech in the day time. The Democrats thought that because Senator Wolcott filled the Temple theater in the day time Gov. Thomas could do the same, so they announced him as a speaker for the afternoon session yesterday. They said he would answer the statements made here recently by Senator Wolcott.

Hay ... was put in an appearance he would have addressed fewer than 50 people, besides the delegates to the convention, and fewer than 125 in all. A little bunch of on-lookers mingled with the delegates and the whole company made a crowd that was accommodated in a few rows of chairs in the center of the house.

But the governor didn't come. He was too sick to leave the Arapahoe county situation in the hands of his co-worker for Democratic success, Mr. Maloney.

Not to be without a speaker, the convention, upon learning that his excellency was not present and having received a telegram notice, in the Gazette, that Congressman Fleming of Georgia is in the city, sent a committee to secure the congressman for a speech. They had not read the Gazette carefully enough, however, and, going to the Alamo instead of the Alta Vista, they failed to locate him.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE CONVENTION.

It was 10:35 when Senator Leddy rapped for order and after the reading of the call by Mr. T. B. Pyles, George Musser was placed in the chair. He spoke for 45 minutes and in that time answered all the arguments made during the campaign thus far, or prior to the campaign, by Wolcott, Roosevelt, Beveridge, Depew and a few others, and in his reference to the administration of El Paso county affairs announced that the nomination of County Commissioner Sinton was on the programme.

T. B. Pyles and J. W. Cummings were elected temporary secretaries, and the following committees were appointed:

On Credentials—K. R. Babbitt, Homer Snyder, George Kennedy, George Bernard, V. P. Hauver, John Sillinger, W. E. Doyle.

On Apportionment of Delegates—D. C. Goddard, H. H. Seldomridge, H. B. Neff, G. P. Quinlan, C. L. McKesson, W. C. Briscoe, H. B. Snyder, M. S. Bates and John Sillingth.

On Resolutions—H. C. Hall, C. deB. Bennet, George Bernard, A. T. Gunnell, Dr. R. S. Briscoe.

The resignation from Geo. Thomas, announcing his inability to be present was read and D. McShane, Lewis Gaylord and K. R. Babbitt were named as a committee to invite Congressman W. A. Fleming to speak.

No committees being ready to report at 1:30 when the convention met after dinner, C. L. McKesson addressed the delegates. He told of his resigning his chance for the judicial nomination to another for the sake of harmony and eloquently lauded the man who could put his ambition down for the good of his party.

MUSSER OPPOSED THE UNIT RULE.

That Mr. Musser was not tickled to death over the treatment that he received was manifested by his attitude throughout the afternoon session. He and Mr. McKesson, the burnt offering, cut together in the middle of a little bunch of sympathizers and occasionally attempted to breast the tide that was sweeping everything before it, but they found that it was to no purpose and gave up.

Loo-le et al, through C. P. Quinlan, moved the instruction of all delegations that they should adopt the unit rule in voting. Mr. Musser objected, stating that it was a Hamiltonian measure and that he believed in Jeffersonian principles. He had K. R. Babbitt, Van Rouse, H. H. Seldomridge, Loo-le, and numerous others to talk against, however.

Mr. V. P. Hauver said he did hope that no bad feeling would be engendered on the matter.

Mr. Rouse said Mr. Musser had forgotten the war cry.

Mr. Musser said it was Hamiltonian and he would always oppose it, but the instruction was given according to a poll of the delegates, by a vote of 102 to 32, and Mr. Musser sat back in his chair to wait for something new to turn up.

VAN E. ROUSE FOR SECRETARY OF STATE.

H. H. Seldomridge said that El Paso had never, to his knowledge, had a place on a state ticket, and that he wanted to move that the delegation for the state convention be instructed to use all honorable means to secure the nomination for "a very important state office" for Mr. Van E. Rouse.

The motion was carried and Mr. Rouse was called for. Nobody had said anything about what the "very important state office" to which Mr. Seldomridge referred was, but Mr. Rouse seemed to have a "hunch." At any rate he thanked the convention very profusely for its having selected him for the nomination for secretary of state.

The instruction of the delegates to the senatorial convention for Mr. Seldomridge followed, as a matter of course, so much so that there was little applause over the act and nobody called for a speech.

"WE MUST ENDORSE WHOM THEY NOMINATE."

The next matter that bobbed up was the manner in which a candidate for county commissioner should be nominated and it bobbed up in sort of ragtime fashion.

Some one called for the nomination of a county commissioner. Judge Gunnell thought the matter better be passed by for the present and H. H. Seldomridge moved that a conference committee of three be named to visit the Peoples party convention and see what the delegates there were doing in the matter. Mr. Musser asked the purport of deferring action and Mr. Hauver arose and said: "I see the purport of it; any man of any foresight at all would see it. We have got to wait until they nominate a man and then we have got to indorse the man they name. We cannot have all the spoils."

This was putting it pretty straight and and Loo-le et al looked very much worried.

Messrs. Musser, Kennedy and Quinlan were made a conference committee, and while they were out conferring with the Populists Mr. Locke of Fountain got up and threw a thunderbolt into the camp, by nominating for county commissioner Mr. John Sillinger of Fountain. Other nominations being called for Mr. Albert Haas of the Fifth ward named M. M. Sinton, the present incumbent, a member of the Populist party. The conference committee came in and reported that it had agreed with the Populists that the latter should have the commissioner. H. H. Seldomridge sent an emissary to Mr. Locke and Mr. Musser also put a word in Mr. Locke's ear, whereupon he arose and withdrew the name of Mr. Sillinger. The Populist candidate was nominated.

CLOSING ACTS OF THE CONVENTION.

The resolutions committee reported through its chairman, H. C. Hall. The resolution are as follows:

"The Democracy of El Paso county, in convention assembled, renews its allegiance to the immortal and enduring principles of Democratic government—laid down by Washington and Jefferson and carried out by the fathers of the republic.

"It pledges itself to earnest cooperation with the Democracy of the nation in an endeavor to check the growing spirit of aggression and commercialism now luring our people to the broad road which so many nations have traveled to their destruction; to restore the judicial government to the safe basis upon which it was founded, and to reanimate it with that regard for human rights which inspires every sentence of our Declaration of Independence.

"It rejects the new born Republican heresy that the Declaration of Independence has become a creed outworn or a creed outgrown.

"It declares that neither the president nor the congress possess any powers save those conferred by the constitution, and that the constitution in all its provisions looks to an indestructible union composed of indestructible states.

"It believes that when the colonial framers of the constitution left out all provision for colonies they knew what they were doing and did it because they knew.

"It protests against executive or congressional usurpation of right to govern the people of Puerto Rico outside of the constitution and without the restraints and limitations thereby imposed.

"It denounces that war of aggression now prosecuted by the president in the Philippine Islands as a violation of the spirit and letter of our constitution, a breach of the law of nations, an act of bad faith—and a crime against human liberty. We may have bought the land but we never bought the inhabitants or their allegiance. The great republic of the occident attempting to strangle the first republic of the orient.

"It declares its loyalty to the principles of the Democratic platform adopted by the Kansas City convention assembled on the anniversary of Independence day.

"It heartily endorses the administration of the affairs of the state of Colorado and county of El Paso by the present executive officers, and commends the laws passed by the present legislature for the amelioration of the conditions of labor.

"It renews its allegiance to the great standard bearer of the national Democracy, William Jennings Bryan, and declares the beliefs that those eternal principles of government for which he stands will in his person be vindicated by the people of the United States at the coming election.

R. S. Briscoe,
C. DeB. Bennet.

Loo-le named K. R. Babbitt as El Paso committeeman on the state central committee. He was elected.

Considerable discussion over the advisability of electing a chairman for the county central committee resulted in the determination to leave that matter to the precinct committee who will elect a successor to Mr. Jones at their next meeting.

There being no central committee for the senatorial district of which El Paso is a part Mr. D. A. Thomas was named as El Paso committeeman and he, together with the committeeman from the other counties of the district, will issue a regular call for a senatorial convention.

The convention then adjourned.

"Killing No Murder."

In the September chapter of the "Life of Oliver Cromwell," which he is writing for the Century, John Morley reaches the time when the Protector became a military dictator.

About this time was published the pamphlet with the famous title of "Killing no Murder." It sets out with truculent vigor the arguments for death to tyrants, with a direct and daily exhortation to apply them to the case of the Lord Protector. The Royalists did not conceal their approval of this doctrine of dagger and pistol. It is a most excellent treatise, says Nicholas, the king's secretary of state, Cromwell and no more right to law than a wolf or a fox, and the exiles found comfort in telling one another that the Protector went about in as much fright as Cain after he had murdered Abel. Three weeks before this appeared, incitement began to circulate, its author had almost succeeded in a design that would have made pamphlets superfluous. Sexby, whom Cromwell had described as the opening of the new parliament as a wretched creature, an apostate from all honor and honesty, one of the republicans whose offers and proceedings had turned into a relentless enemy, was deep in plots with Royalists abroad and even with the Spaniards, against the life of the Protector. Diligent watch was kept upon Sexby, and for long his foreign employers got nothing for their money. At length he secured a confederate as determined as himself, and less well known to Thurloe's police, in Miles Sindercombe, an old trooper of Monk's, and a hater of tyrants rather after Roman than Hebrew example. Sindercombe dogged the Protector with a pistol in his pocket, took a lodging in the road between Whitehall and Hampton court, where Oliver passed every week, offered bribes to the guards and at last his partnership came very near to success in a plan for setting fire to the Protector's apartments in Whitehall. He was arrested, brought before a jury—a substantial body of men, most of them justices of the peace—and was condemned. He died in his bed in the Tower the night before the execution.

Sindercombe's plot was exploded in January (1657), and the Protector's narrow escape made a profound impression on the public mind. It awoke sober men, who are a majority in most countries when opportunity gives them a chance, to the fact that only Oliver's life stood between them and either anarchy on the one hand, or a vindictive restoration on the other.

Stowaway Brides.

Stowaway brides are not as rare as the Barge office as one would believe. It is quite easy for a girl to slip aboard an outgoing steamer and stow herself in one of the bunks below decks, lying quietly there till well at sea. A case happened a little while ago—the girl coming to meet her fiance here. As both were poor, the former resorted to this perilous expedient to accomplish the desired end. One would think that such a heroic endeavor would deserve a better reception, but on arriving, having been worked very hard on shipboard for passage, worn and worried almost to distraction, the maiden was so changed by her ordeal of love that when her betrothed met her, he refused to marry her. A few days later, while being taken back to the ship for deportation, she leaped into the bay. Rescued gallantly, she lingered a prisoner in the charity hospital, but died some weeks later, literally of a broken heart.—From Ainslee's Magazine.

The Last of the Jayhawkers.

John J. Ingalls wrote, in his lifetime, three Kansas classics. Before his entrance into political life, he was not an inconsequent contributor to the literature of Kansas, but three skits which he penned during the brief and troublous days of the old Kansas Magazine stund out above and beyond everything else he ever wrote—at least in the opinion of Kansas people. These three are "Catfish Aristocracy", "Blue Grass" and "The Last of the Jayhawkers." "Catfish Aristocracy" and "Blue Grass" are the best known of these, but "The Last of the Jayhawkers" is not a whit less entertaining. Herein is:

The Audubon of the twentieth century, as he compiles the history of the birds of Kansas, will vainly search the Ornithological Biographies of his illustrious predecessor for any allusion to the "jayhawk." Investigation will disclose the jay (cyanurus cristatus) and the hawk (accipeter fuscus); the former a mischievous, quarrelsome egg-sucker, a blue-coated cousin of the crow and an epicure of carrion; the latter a cloud-haunting pirate, the assassin of the atmosphere, whose flattened skull, rapacious beak and insatiable appetite for blood impel it to an agency of destruction, and place it among the incisive ranks of the living ministers of death.

Were it not that nature forbids the adulterous confusion of her types, he might surmise that the jayhawk was a mule among birds, the illicit offspring of some audacious jason or aerial intrigue endowed with the most malign attributes of its progenitors. But as this conclusion would be unerringly rejected by the deductions of his science, he would be compelled to look elsewhere for the origin of this obscure tenant of the air, whose notable exploits caused it to be accepted as the symbol of the infant state, giving to a famous regiment its title, and to the inhabitants their novel appellation of "jayhawkers," by that happy nomenclature, which would induce the unsophisticated chronicler to suppose that the populations of Illinois was composed entirely of infants at the breast, and that the chief vegetable productions of Missouri were ipecac and lobelia.

Convinced by his reasoning that the jayhawk no longer existed, he would naturally inquire whether it had once lived and became extinct, or whether it was merely a fabulous myth, the creation of vagrant fancy, flying only in a dreamer's brain.

Instances are not wanting of other celebrated birds whose origin is equally uncertain, and whose existence ever has been denied. Prominent among them is the dodo, that enigma in feathers, the last of whose melancholy race was reported to have expired not earlier than two centuries ago upon the island of Mauritius. This belief was accepted by the scientific world upon what appeared to be credible evidence, and yet its erroneousness was conclusively shown by Oliver Wendell Holmes, in a case involving the question, tried several years since before the Suffolk common pleas, in which the doctor introduced in testimony a bill of sale showing in unmistakable terms that a dodo had been recently sold in Boston, and that, consequently, the bird could not have been extinct. The document was as follows:

1856. To Robert C. Greer, Dr.
Oct. 13—To one canary bird $3.50
Nov. 10—To one do do 3.00

Received payment $6.50

The dumb placards of modern insurance companies have familiarized the public mind with the phoenix, an Arabian fowl, reputed to live 500 years, at the expiration of which patriarchal period it erected a funeral pyre of sweet-scented woods, aromatic gums, and, perched upon its apex, fanned it into flame by the undulations of its tail, and was suicidally consumed in the conflagration.

It is related of a famous wit who supposed that he was dying that his physician felt of his extremities, found they were not cold, and told his patient that no man could die while his feet were warm; to which he responded that he had heard of one who did, and, being asked to name him, replied, "John Rogers!" whereupon a heavenly smile lit up his wan features and he passed on to the higher life.

A phoenix was another instance of the same fact, and its last hours were probably consoled by the thought that out of its ashes another phoenix would arise to take its place. The story is similarly credited and reproduced, and subsequently alluded to by an American newspaper in connection with the great Chicago fire. As but one phoenix existed at one time, and he was his own successor, this bird has the honor of being the only known illustration in the animal kingdom of a sole corporation.

The reader of the Arabian Night's entertainments will not fail to recall the roc—the roc upon which so many have split—the roc of ages gone by, one of whose eggs, suitably decomposed, would have made an omelette for the entire Liberal Republican party of Kansas.

Time would fail to tell of the Auk, the Apteryx, the harpy, the ancytrox and the ornithorhynchus, of whom the world was not worthy, that have wandered in deserts and in mountains, and in dens and caves of the earth; vague, mysterious creatures, concerning of the jayhawk in its dubious origin and its wild career.

The jayhawk is a creation of mythology. Every nation has its myths, human and animal, some of which disappear as the state matures, while others continue to stand out upon its early horizon in conspicuous proportions, enlarged rather than diminished by the distance that intervenes.

The infancy and childhood of communities, as well as that of individuals, abound in legends and traditions, which become "crystallized," by time, into a mythology in which qualities become personified, and the forces and operations of nature are symbolized as living beings, so that history, like the nursery, has its Mother Goose's melodies, whose rude rhymes were sung at the cradle of the race.

In the twilight of time the domain of fact insensibly yields to the shadowy realms of fable, the true and the false are confounded; the real is indistinguishable from the imaginary; and out of the confusion is born a brood of phantoms and chimeras, centaurs, demi-gods and goddesses, heroes and monsters, phoenixes and jayhawks, that under different names have peopled the early times of every nation since the world began. In the strange pre-creation, beauty becomes Venus; strength, Hercules; appetite, Bacchus; manhood in its glory, Apollo; and the elements themselves are endowed with sentient life.

The process is not, as we are apt to imagine, peculiar to the races of antiquity, but is witnessed in the history of every community, great or small, which attempts the experiment of an independent existence. The realization of later days sometimes strips these phantasms of their insubstantial vestments and reveals their native deformity, as the traveler with his lens detects upon the distant summit which seems but a deeper stain upon the forehead of the morning sky, its rugged path of forest and ice, its gray scalp of rock, but generally they become more respectable with age, and are accepted as facts. Poetry decorates them with its varnish. Orators cover them with a rhetorical vender, and they are incorporated into the general literature of the country.

Had an irreverent Athenian ventured to doubt Silenus or denounce Priapus, he would probably have been received with a stormy outcry like that which greeted Bancroft when he ventured to disclose the truth about some of the paragons of early American history. And yet it cannot be denied that the popular notion of the founders of the government are as purely mythological as the Grecian dream of Jupiter and Minerva.

With what awe in our boyhood do we contemplate the majestic name of Washington! That benign and tranquil, though somewhat stolid visage, looks down upon us from a serene atmosphere unstained with earthly passion.

That venerable fame bears no taint of mortal frailty save in the juvenile legend of the hatchet, in which the venial error is expiated by the immortal candor of its confession. To our revering fancy, the massive form wrapped in military cloak stands forever at midnight upon the frozen banks of the Delaware watching the patriot troops cross the ice current in the darkness before the grand morning of Trenton; or else arrayed in black velvet, small clothes, resigning his commission to the Continental congress at Annapolis. We learn in riper years, with grief not unmingled with incredulity, that this great man was subject to ungovernable outbreaks of rage, that he swore like a mule driver, and that he was not only the father of his country, but also of Governor Posey, of Indiana.

With such disheartening examples before us, it is not unreasonable to believe that the student of Kansas history 100 years hence, as he reverts from the men and manners of that degenerate time to the first splendid lustra of his native state, will turn to Genesis, vi:4, for consolation, and say, with a sigh: "There were giants in the earth in those days." The colossal characters nurtured in the primeval convulsions of our politics will have passed into mythology. Tradition will have lent its pensive charm to the eloquence of Carney, the unquenchable fire of Crawford, Lane's impregnable virtue, Lowe's aggressive vigor, the sensitive honor of Clarke, that tall, young oak of the Kaw, whose acorns fattened the swine in Caldwell's sty. Caldwell, who proudly rose in his seat in the United States senate in 1872 and hurled back with indignation the charge that he bought his senatorial toga at a political slop-shop, sh, who could forbear to admit that there were indeed giants in the earth in those days!

This was the close of the epoch when the jayhawk flew in the troubled atmosphere. It was an early bird and it caught many a Missouri worm. The worms did not object to the innocent amusement of the bird, but they insisted that public opinion must and should be respected.

But the bird had a mission. It could not be caught with chaff, nor would it allow salt to be put on its tail. It pursued its ministry of retribution, protection and vengeance through many bloody years, till the worms were fain to concede the superiority of their feathered antagonist and adopt the sentiment of the popular melody, "O, birdie, I am tired now."

The border ruffians in '55 constructed the egg in which the jayhawk was hatched, and it broke the shell upon the treedy shores of the Marias des Cygnes. Its habits were not migratory, and for many years its habitat was Southern Kansas; but eventually it extended its field of operations northward, and soon after the outbreak of the war was domiciled in the gloomy dells and lonely forests of the bluffs whose rugged bastions resist the assaults of the Missouri from the mouth of the Kaw to the Nebraska line.

The situation was favorable. The occasion was auspicious. The new state, itself intensely loyal, had but two lines of intercourse with its eastern fiefs, one by rail and one by river—both under the control of enemies who considered the engulfing of trains through broken bridges and the murder of unsuspecting passengers upon steamers from ambush along the shores as honorable warfare.

To the westward south extended unpeopled and desolate solitudes, open to sudden invasion. Hostile campfires burned around the fistulous lakes in the forests of Buchanan and Platte, and the insolent challenge of the sentinel was heard at nightfall upon the shores of the deserted river. The memories of brutal wrongs were fresh in the minds of implacable sufferers.

The farms and plantations of that irregular triangle known as the "Platte purchase," whose hypothenuse is the Missouri river, abounded in horses and herds, hogs and cattle, the accumulation of years of unexampled prosperity. Its fat soil nurtured magnificent orchards. Its broad fields, cultivated by a race of negroes whose average intelligence was superior to that of their lazy lords, had returned incredible yields of wheat, hemp and corn. Money was abundant. Granary, bin and larder were overflowing. Spacious mansions, with airy verandas and porticos, comfortable appurtenances of barns and outbuildings, reposed in the tranquil seclusion of pastured lawns, whose ancient trees cast a venerable shade upon the blue grass sward below.

Indifferent roads and lack of public conveyances rendered the saddle the chief dependence for local communication, and resulted in a breed of incomparable riding horses, whose peculiar gait, known as "single-foot rack" is the poetry of locomotion. A generous diet, freedom from the worst cares of life, and much exercise on horseback during the greater portion of the year, had gradually produced a race of ruddy and stalwart men, bold and turbulent by nature in youth, but rendered timid by wealth and toned down to inaction in riper years by too much fat bacon and "applejack and honey."

Slavery, as practiced among them, had few of its most repulsive features, but its existence fixed their political convictions. So they put their sons on their best horses and sent them south with plethoric saddlebags to join the hordes of Price, while they themselves remained at home upon their plantations and avowed their unalterable devotion to the constitution and the union.

Amid the convulsions of the period, and with the stimulus of an unappeasable appetite for vengeance, such an inviting field could not long remain unvisited. The temptation was irresistible, and the jayhawk plumed itself for the quarry. The courts were closed. The regular armies were engaged in other directions.

The authorities on either side were too much engrossed to listen to complaints. The young men were in the brush or the camp. All the ordinary avocations of industry and the usual pursuits of life were at an end. The negroes laid down the shovel and the hoe, picked up as substitutes for the agricultural implements, saddles, horses, wagons, furniture, beds, provisions and simultaneously started for Kansas, waking the echoes as they thronged the ferries, with their amazing chorus, "Oh, we're the Snollygosters and we'll all fine de Union!" In some instances they were pursued by their former owners, assisted by their facile partisans in the land of refuge, conveyed by night in skiffs across the river, and, after frightful preliminary torture, deliberately burned to death.

At this time patriotism and larceny had not entirely coalesced, and upon the debatable frontier between these contending passions appeared a race of thrifty warriors, whose souls were rent with conflicting emotions at the thought of their bleeding country's wrongs, and the available assets of Missouri. Their avowed object was the protection of the border. Their real design was indiscriminate plunder. They adopted the name of "Jayhawkers."

Conspicuous among the irregular heroes who thus sprang to arms in 1861 and ostensibly their leader, was an Ohio stage driver by the name of Charles Metz, who, having graduated with honors from the penitentiary of Missouri, assumed from prudential reasons the more euphonious and distinguished appellation of "Cleveland." He was a picturesque brigand. Had he worn a slashed doublet and trunk hose of black velvet, he would have been the ideal of an Italian bandit.

Young, erect and tall, he was sparely built, and arrayed himself like a gentleman in the costume of the day. His appearance was that of a student. His language was that of a complexion olive-tinted and colorless, as it sickled o'er with the pale cast of thought.

Black piercing eyes, finely cut features, dark hair and beard trimmed correctly, completed a tout ensemble that was strangely at variance with the aspect of the score of desolate and dirty desperadoes that formed his command.

These were generally degraded ruffians of the worst type, whose highest idea of elegance in personal appearance was to have their mustaches dyed a villainous metallic black, irrespective of the consideration whether its native hue was red or brown. It is a noticeable fact that a dyed mustache stamps its wearer inevitably either as a pitiful snob or an irreclaimable scoundrel.

The vicinity of the fort, with its troops, rendered Leavenworth undesirable as a base of operations. St. Joseph was also heavily garrisoned and they accordingly selected Atchison as the point from which to move on the enemy's works.

Atchison at that time contained about 2,500 inhabitants. Its business was transacted upon one street, and extended west about four blocks from the river. Its position upon the extreme curve of the "Grand Detour" of the Missouri afforded unrivaled facilities for the escape to the interior in the event of pursuit. Having its principal patronage settled by southerners, it still afforded much legitimate game for our bird of prey, and its loyal population having already largely enlisted, the city was incapable of organizing resistance to the depredations of the marauders.

They established their headquarters at the saloon of a German named Benoit Benner, where they held their councils of war and whence they started upon their forays. The matter was favorable to their designs, as the river closed early, enabling them to cross upon the ice.

Cleveland proclaimed himself marshal of Kansas, and announced his determination to run the country. He invited the cordial co-operation of all good citizens to assist him in sustaining the government and punishing its foes.

Ignorant of his resources and his purposes, the people at first were inclined to welcome their strange guests as a protection from the dangers to which they were exposed, but it soon became apparent that the doctors were worse than the disease.

They took possession of the town, defied the municipal authorities, and committed such intolerable excesses that their expulsion was a matter of public safety. Their incursions into Missouri were so frequent and audacious that a company of infantry was sent from Weston and stationed at Winthrop to effect their capture, but to no purpose. They soon ceased to inquire about the political views of their victims.

If a man had an enemy in any part of the country whom he wished to injure, he reported him to Cleveland as a traitor, and the next night he was robbed of all he possessed and considered fortunate if he escaped without personal violence. In some cases, at the intercession of friends, the property was restored; but generally there was no redress.

A small detachment of cavalry was sent from the fort to take them, but just as they had dismounted in front of the saloon, and were hitching their horses, Cleveland appeared at the door with a cocked navy in each hand, and told them he would shoot the first man that moved a finger. Calling two or three of his followers, he disarmed the dragoons, took their horses and equipments, and sent them back on foot upon the vicissitudes of military affairs.

Early in 1862 the condition became desperate, and the city authorities, in connection with the commander at Winthrop, concerted a scheme which brought matters to a crisis. Cleveland and about a dozen of his gang were absent in Missouri on a scout. The time of their return was known, and Marshal Holbert had his forces stationed in the shadow of an old warehouse near the bank of the river. It was a brilliant moonlight night in midwinter.

The freebooters emerged from the forest and crossed upon the ice. They were freshly mounted and each had a spare horse. Accompanying them were two sleighs loaded with negroes, harness and miscellaneous plunder.

As they ascended the steep shore of the levee, unconscious of danger, they were all taken prisoners, except Cleveland, who, turned suddenly, spurred his horse down the embankment, and escaped.

The captives were taken to Weston, while they soon after enlisted in the Federal army. The next day Cleveland rode into town, captured the city marshal on the street and declared his intention to hold him as a hostage for the safety of his men. He compelled the marshal to walk by the side of his horse a short distance, when, finding a crowd gathering for his rescue, he struck him a blow on the head with his pistol and fled.

He continued his exploits for some months, but was finally driven to bay in one of the southern counties, and attempting to let himself down a precipitous ravine was shot by a soldier from above, the ball entering under the arm and passing through his body.

His temporary widow took his sacred clay to St. Joseph, where its place of interment is marked by a marble headstone bearing the usual memoranda, and concluding with the following:

One hero less on earth,
One angel more in heaven!

The unreliable character of gravestone literature has been the theme of frequent comment, but unless this ostensible eulogy was intended as a petrified piece of jocularity, and gratuitously inscribed by the sculptor, it may, perhaps, be justly considered the most liberal application of the maxim, "nil de mortuis nisi bonum," to be found in any American cemetery.—Kansas City Journal.

China's Awakening.

The Rev. Dr. D. Z. Sheffield, for many years a missionary in China, returned to that country in June, on learning of the destruction of the North China college at Tung-chau, of which he is the president. Before sailing, he had written for the September Century a paper on "The Influence of the Western World on China."

"Men from the west have been explaining to the Chinese for a round generation the vastness of the agricultural and mineral resources of the country. The stock theme of conversation on meeting scholars or officials is the value of steam and electricity, coal and iron, western machinery and labor-saving devices. The Chinese are impressed with the evidence of the wealth and prosperity of Christian nations. Wherever the foot of a European rests, property, for some reason, seems to take on a new value. The Chinese, when there are money incentives involved, are not slow in learning. The best men among the officials, scholars and merchants are not still sleeping and dreaming of the ancients, in ignorance and indifference as to the resources of the country and the proper means for their development. Many of them are keenly awake to the opportunities and needs of the times. They lack confidence in their government; they lack capital; they lack knowledge and skill and experience; they are aware of their need of foreign help in the possession of their wealth. They are now discussing with great earnestness the question as to how they may secure the needed help, and yet prevent the lion's share of profits crossing the "great waters."

"Thus many and powerful influences are already operating upon China from without, producing impressions that will be far-reaching in their results. Through the missionaries, in their evangelistic, educational and literary work, a new moral ozone is being breathed into the life of the people, and new thoughts of material and intellectual progress are being widely propagated. Through the customs service, the home and foreign diplomatic service, the Chinese are learning that they are not, as they had supposed, the only dwellers within the circle of civilization, and that the supposed "outside barbarians" have valuable truths to communicate to them, and worthy institutions that they will do well to study and imitate. Through increasing trade they are learning that the "fire-wheel ships" bring wealth to China, and they are beginning to grapple with the new problem of gaining possession of their vast but undeveloped resources.

A Popular Priest.

Pere Didon, the brilliant pulpit orator, is the subject of a paper by Th. Bentzon in the September Century.

The recent death of Pere Didon has removed one of the most remarkable figures of modern France. In 1892, when after an enforced silence of several years, he resumed preaching in Paris, it would have been hard for a stranger seeking to gain entrance into the church of the Madeleine to place any faith in the existence of that indifference in the matter of religion which is so generally charged to Parisians. The crowd which packed the approaches to the church was one of those through which one delivery of opening a way. The choir was invaded by men to the very foot of the altar; its stops swarmed with people, and each of the great columns was surrounded by clusters. In the street there stood a long file of carriages; hawkers cried programmes gotten up in a kind of religious form and bearing the preacher's likeness; your ticket for the course of sermons had to be presented at the entrance; ladies of fashion were compelled to go into the church by side doors, from which, with triumphant airs, they ascended the dark and narrow stairways, until they reached those boxes upholstered with red velvet, which are at all times suggestive of the theater.

So, when he stood erect once more in the far too richly gilded pulpit of the Madeleine, with that majestic carriage of his which brought out in magnificent relief on his broad shoulders the habit of Savonarola—the white robe and the black mantle which Pere Lacordaire had worn in days gone by at Notre Dame, in the Convent of Scholastic, and of the Academie, a thrill went through the audience followed by a sympathetic murmur respectfully subdued. Pere Didon was one of those men whose aspect, physiognomy, and speech inspire one with an irresistible desire to applaud; there was in him, whatever he did, something of the actor of genius, and this was emphasized by his vague resemblance to Coquelin, whose type, curiously enough, is to be met with in the person of another of the great Catholic preachers of the present day, Pere Monsabre.

Lizzt's Personality.

The best impression of Lizzt's appearance in 1854, writes Dr. William Mason in the September Century, is conveyed by a picture which shows him approaching the Altenburg. His back is turned, nevertheless, there is a certain something which shows the man as he was better even than those portraits in which his features are clearly reproduced. The picture gives his gait, his figure, and his general appearance. There is his tall, lank form, his high but not a little-to-one side, and his head a trifle aslant. He had piercing eyes; his hair was very dark, but not black. He wore it long, just as he did in his old days. It hung almost down to his shoulders, and was cut off square at the bottom. He had it cut frequently, so as to keep it at about the same length. This was a point about which he was very particular.

As I remember his hands, his fingers were lean and thin; but they did not impress me as being very long, and he did not have such a remarkable stretch on the keyboard as one might imagine. He was always neatly dressed, generally appearing in a long frock coat, until he became the Abbe Liszt, after which he wore the distinctive black gown. His general manner and his face were most expressive of his feelings, and his features lighted up when he spoke. His smile was simply charming. His face was peculiar. One could hardly call it handsome, yet there was in it a subtle something that was most attractive, and his whole manner had a fascination which it is impossible to describe.

The New Lochinvar.

"Some of the most trying, and yet ludicrous cases with which Mrs. Stucklen, the chief of the Women's department at the Barge office, has to deal concern applicants for wives who come there from the far west. These individuals sometimes furnish a deal of sport for officials and the immigrants themselves, who are not all of them devoid of a sense of humor. But they get such a severe catechising at the hands of the chief of the Woman's department that they generally depart wider and wiser. Offers of marriage come by almost every mail from various parts of the country, but these are usually ignored. The inspector argues with feminine acuteness that the man who cannot find a wife in his own district, with so many marriageable girls on the outlook for well-to-do husbands, has little to offer the Barge office maiden.

"A case occurred some time since, the applicant being a self-confident man of years, who wandered through the Barge office on the look-out for the loveliest arrival. He finally picked out a buxom German lass and imparted his intentions to the inspector. Mrs. Stucklen questioned him, and then sent for the girl, making known to her the applicant's intentions, assuring the girl on the man's word, that he had a snug fortune and promised to pay the sum of $1,000 cash after the ceremony. But the German lassie only laughed at the presumptuous suitor, saying that if he were a "millionaire" she would not marry such an ugly-faced old goose as he. Much shrunken in self estimation, the rejected suitor departed, to the merriment of the inspectors and all who were in the secret."—Ainslee's Magazine.

Corinth Dug Up.

American scholarship, enterprise and industry are restoring the lost Greek city of Corinth to civilization.

The members of the American school of Classical Studies in Greece have just unearthed a wonderful and beautiful collection of antiquities in Corinth, once the capital of the Achaean league and the rival of Athens in ancient Greek history. It was founded 1,350 years before Christ.

These discoveries are so large and important that the Greek government is constructing a special museum for them. They show that the American archaeologists in Greece are now serious rivals of the Germans, French and English. The work was done under the direction of Prof. Rufus B. Richardson.

The excavations were made in the Agora, the market place of the ancient city. The site of this city is now practically deserted except by the archaeologists and their assistants. The name of Corinth is perpetuated by a miserable modern city about three miles away.

The greatest discovery made by the Americans was of the Propylaea, or monumental gate of the Agora. The work will finally result in the complete reconstruction of the Propylaea, in addition to the columns and foundations of the Propylaea the explorers found many interesting details. Among these was a beautiful head of Ariadne, whose love for the hero, Theseus, is one of the greatest stories of Greek mythology.

The first statues found were a pair of colossal figures, eight feet high, wearing the Phrygian cap, with bag to plasters at the back. Two Corinthian square capitals fitted on to the tops of these plasters. The back of the heads of the statues were cut away, that they might be wrapped up in the capital, which was also cut away a little. The figures thus appeared to assist at least in bearing the architrave, and so were analogous to the famous caryatids. Two square bases, three feet each way, with the same ornamentation as the architrave blocks, and with most shabby reliefs on one side, were seen to be bases for these figures, the plinth with the feet of one of the statues fitting exactly into the depression at the top of one of them. Thus they can reconstruct the whole system from the bottom up.

Two more large, fine female heads, with the same proportions and the same cuttings at the back, belong evidently to the same series, but nothing of their bodies has yet been recovered. One large plaque of ceiling, doubtless of the same building, containing in two of its sunken squares busts of Helios and Selene in relief, and in a third a rosette, is supplemented by several other plaques with rosettes.

"Then came the discovery of a very fine head of Ariadne, with an ivy wreath and one hand thrown up over the head, in a state of perfect preservation; then a relief, with two ecstatic maenads most beautifully carved on a rounded block which formed a part of a base about four feet in diameter, perhaps a base for a group of Dionysus and Ariadne from which the head just mentioned came.

"About 75 feet southwest of the west end of the Propylaea the investigators came upon a platform about three feet high, with a facade made of metopes and triglyphs and a coping above them, with red, blue and yellow paint covering them, making a fine show even now. This facade had a length of about 30 feet, and is a part of its extent it had no platform behind it, and was simply a facade. At one point it was broken through. This led into a room in the west wall of which were two rather under-sized lions' heads of bronze, through the wide-open mouths of which water had once flowed. Beneath them were the round holes in the pavement in which pitchers were placed for filling. Above them there projected forward the edge of the native ledge with which the explorers had become familiar two years ago in the fountain Peirene at the other end of the Propylaea. There was no doubt that here they were at an ancient Greek level, and that the fountain is an ancient Greek fountain, not destroyed like Glauke nor remodelled several times like Peirene, but remaining completely intact, entirely unique.

"Although it is certain that the fountain itself is Greek, the balustrade at the top of the steps is Roman in the sense that it was placed there when Corinth was refounded by Julius Caesar. But it is Greek, and very interesting Greek, in that it is taken from temples which Mummius destroyed when they had all their parts fresh upon them, and convey to us a lively impression of the distribution of color on a Doric temple.

Professor Richardson has written the following account of his discoveries, which we are enabled to reprint through the courtesy of the Independent:

The luck of the excavation at Corinth is the e thing that impresses me when I look back over our four campaigns. When we began work in 1886 there was nothing that we so much desired to find as the Agora, not only because the Agora of every Greek city was the center of its life, but because Pausanias, the excavator's friend and patron saint, had recorded that most of the important monuments of Corinth were in and near its Agora. One unsuccessful attempt, however, to find the Agora had already been made by a Greek archaeologist five years earlier; and considering the enormous area of the ancient city and the fact that not a single monument in the description of Pausanias, which was very clear though brief, remained above ground, except the venerable temple ruin, which could not be identified with anything in that description, I had no thought of finding the Agora except by a very gradual approach, and declared in advance that I should consider the first year's work a success if we found anything. And we did find something—viz.: the theatre (to speak more exactly, two theatres, a Greek one and a Roman one on top of it) under 15 or 20 feet of earth, where it still lies, except that six trenches broad and deep still furnish the visitor an opportunity to study its structure, which has been duly described in the American Journal of Archaeology. But this something proved to be everything. From it, by the help of Pausanias, a ray of light shot out into the darkness, and I jumped at once to a conclusion as to the location of the Agora, and fortunately recorded in print the quick and almost rash conclusion.

We waited three years for the absolute certainty. The Turkish war having caused the excavation to drop out in 1897, we found and excavated in the next year the famous fountain Peirene, and knew that we were drawing nearer to the goal. In 1899 we passed up a flight of marble steps, through the buttresses of the Propylaea, through which the road from Lechaeon, the harbor on the Corinthian gulf, entered the Agora, and scored our goal. The topography of Corinth was thereby made absolutely clear. We could draw a map of the ancient city. The massive temple relic, which we completely excavated, got its correct name, and is now to be known as the Apollo temple. We also excavated a second fountain between it and the theater, further west, which fell into line as Glauke; and here the Greek gods were kind in giving us to excavate a fountain already dry, very different from Peirene, which in the preceding year had given us so much trouble, because through it flowed the water supply of the poverty stricken modern village known as Old Corinth.

Our work inside the Agora, however, was disappointing. We cleared in it an area adjacent to the Propylaea of three or four hundred square yards, without finding anything worthy of record. Of the Propylaea itself we found nothing beyond the formless stumps of the buttresses, and none of that magnificence that appears on coins of the times of the Roman emperors.

We began the work this year, then, with some misgivings lest, while the Romans had not here destroyed all that the Greeks had built, yet the Slavs or Goths, or whoever those modern night hawks of barbarians are, at any rate might have destroyed all that the Romans had spared, or built. It was under the impulse of a sense of duty to dig where we had already got the Greek government to put the land at our disposal, and to arrive at least at a negative result before we asked for more room, rather than with any very high hopes of important finds, that we took up the work in April of the present year.

Because the land at our disposal lay mainly to the west, up hill, from the Propylaea, we laid our track around the west end of the Propylaea into the Agora. And here luck was with us. We were driven to success, and it came easy. In all former campaigns we had gone through long weeks of dullness to achieve our results just at the end. So it was with the discovery of the theater, of Peirene and of the Agora. But now at the outset we ran upon such massive marble blocks that we found difficulty in pushing our truck ahead, and our derrick had to earn double the pike which we had paid for it last year.

Besides the blocks, such architrave and cornice blocks, with elaborately carved ornamental bands, we soon came upon a colossal statue in three pieces, attached to a pilaster, and immediately afterward found a massive base for the statue, with an odd looking relief. Then came another similar base, and right beside it the upper half of another colossal statue, a duplicate of the first. It stood in a roughly made wall, perpendicular, but with the head downward. Our excitement increased as we cleared it down to its perfect calm, and then to its perfect mouth. We yelled with delight when we saw a perfect nose. The other statue had lost its nose, which had been made of a separate piece set in. It was not luck to find statues with noses, because when a statue "takes a header" from its base, it is sure to lose its nose, unless it has the rare fortune of the Hermes of Praxiteles to fall into a bed of mud. Two other colossal heads, found later, of the same type, were in the first two, cut away at the back. We also found some square Corinthian capitals, which fitted upon the tops of pilasters at the back. The capitals had also been slightly cut away on one side to allow the heads to be brought more closely up against the pilasters. Upon these capitals fitted the architrave blocks, and upon these the cornice blocks. So we have all the members of a facade from base to summit. It is probable that they all came from the Propylaea, to which may be assigned also several large pieces of coffered ceiling with reliefs in their depressions, two such reliefs representing Helios and Selene. An architect will now be able to make a drawing of the Propylaea, which in itself would constitute the success of a campaign. But this was only our beginning.

I will not here discuss or even detail all that we found; but will confine myself to the two greatest achievements. In the first place, we went an finding marble sculpture so much, in fact, that the Greek government immediately started the erection of a local museum, the provisional museum hitherto employed being inadequate.

The most showy piece which we found was a life sized head of Ariadne, with the right hand pressing down an ivy wreath upon it. The tips of the slightly [illegible] of the ivy leaves; but in the course of the day all the missing finger tips and one ivy leaf were found. A large fragment of a round base found near by contained a relief of two dancing maenads, two-thirds life size, whose flowing drapery reminded that of the figure of the famous balustrade of the Nike temple at Athens. Quite likely the Ariadne statue stood on this base. Both the relief and the head are works of Roman times, as one sees from the lack of careful finish. But the artist had good models. Whether the Nike balustrade inspired the relief or not, it is almost certain that the Erectheion inspired the architecture and sculpture of the Propylaea, its palmetto ornaments and bearing figures, both slop work in comparison to their great originals.

A less showy piece, but one that is redolent and unmistakable Greek art, is the right hand portion of a small votive relief containing seven figures gracefully poised and grouped. This, perhaps, deserves to be considered our best sculpture find.

There was an especial satisfaction in finding so much sculpture, for two reasons:

First, because sculpture is what the general public look for in excavations. Excavators themselves are apt to think of great monuments like temples and theaters as their great end, and to look at objects of art as something very desirable, but distinctly secondary. During the year when we excavated Peirene, and thought we were doing very well, the assistant government ephor, through an illiterate man, probably voiced the sentiments of a somewhat wide public when he remarked to me one day: "These are the first serious excavations that I ever attended where there were no finds." By the word "serious" he meant doubtless that we were spending a good deal of money. The workmen shared this feeling, as a matter of course, although they brightened up greatly at the discovery of a few headless statues, all of which I would gladly have exchanged for one first class inscription.

The second reason for satisfaction was that the fact that in former years we found a good many statues and no heads to speak of had been talked about. Something like an insinuation had once been made that workmen were stealing heads. The director of a museum in Europe was said to have jocularly expressed his thanks to the Americans for having dug out for him a very fine head in the museum purporting to come from a Corinthian peasant. Not that I ever gave any credence to the report that such a head had really come from our excavations; one who knows much of the ways of those who offer antiquities for sale in Greece has noticed two facts; first, that they are very reluctant to tell the real provenance of the article; secondly, that they generally give some place which is in fact so to speak at one period Olympia, at another Delphi, at another Thebes. It is not to be surprised if Corinth [illegible] be in vogue. But at any rate, it has been shown that we are sufficiently watchful at Corinth to keep what is really found.

Next year, if we have money, we shall, of course, proceed up the hill. We have already made our most important discoveries; or we may do simply at the beginning. An enormous vaulted chamber, already excavated by us in the southern flank of the hill, about thirty yards from our fountain, makes me incline to the latter view. Mr. Kabbadias, the Greek Ephor General of Antiquities, on his return to Athens from a visit to Corinth, said in an interview with the editor of the Herald: "God knows what new establishment awaits us when the Americans proceed up that slope."—Rufus B. Richardson, in the New York Journal.

Accepted by Liszt.

In the third paper of his "Memories of a Musical Life," in the September Century, Dr. William Mason tells of his acceptance as a pupil of Liszt, nearly 50 years ago.

"When we rose from the table and went into the drawing room, Liszt said: 'I have a new piano, from Erard of Paris. Try it and see how you like it.' He asked me to pardon him if he moved about the room, for he had to get together some papers which it was necessary to take with him, as he was going to the palace of the grand duke. 'As the palace is on the way to the hotel, we can walk as far as that together,' he added.

"I felt intuitively that my opportunity had come. I sat down at the piano with the idea that I would not endeavor to show Liszt how to play, but would play as simply as if I were alone. I played 'Adelle, pour Adelle,' a little piece of my own, which had just been published by Hofmeister of Leipsic.

"'That's one of your own?' asked Liszt when I had finished. 'Well, it is a charming little piece.' Still nothing was said about my being a pupil. But when we left the Altenburg, he said casually, 'You say you are going to Leipsic for a few days on business?' While there you had better select your piano and have it sent here. Meanwhile I will tell Klinworth to look up rooms for you. Indeed, there is a vacant room in the house in which he lives, which is pleasantly situated, not outside the limits of the ducal palace.'

"I can still recall the thrill of joy which passed through me when Liszt spoke these words. They left no doubt in my mind. I was accepted as his pupil. We walked down the hill toward the palace, Liszt leaving me when he arrived at the palace, telling me, however, that he would call later at the hotel to introduce me to my fellow-pupils.

"I had no idea that Liszt was, at that time, what his manner was, but I soon learned from my arrival at Weimar that he never took any pupils, but rather would be blind to all to which he wished to avoid obligations. It was impossible, and to feel free to take a teacher for short periods when so inclined.

"In other words, to go and come as he liked.

THE COLORADO SPRINGS MINING STOCK EXCHANGE

Colorado Springs, Colo., Sept. 6.—The market today was not encouraging as there was weakness which had a general effect on the majority of stocks. Elkton and Isabella, the two leaders, moved again in contrary directions, the former being strong and higher and the latter furnishing the interesting feature of the session. If it were not for the continued strength of Elkton it is more than probable that the market would go to pieces as there are all manners of dishearten[illegible] rumors, not only about Isabella but even concerning Stratton's Independence, as the lesser stocks are wholly influenced by the progress of the large mines. Elkton's good showing is a reviving and timely fact. Although Isabella showed great weakness at the opening of the call, these shares regained somewhat and closed at $1.01½. Elkton was very heavily traded in and the stock was very secure at $1.90.

The sales for the day amounted to 543,749 shares, of which the cash value was $169,436.75.

A Woman of the Image Office.—"There seem to be plentiful opportunities among the immigrants coming to America on shipboard for falling in love, particularly on the slower steamers, when people are thrown together for a period of from twelve to eighteen days. In this case, a worthy young Russian was chosen out of a very pretty bride by a likely Italian fellow-traveler of the maiden. Strangely enough she knew not one word of Italian nor he a word of Russian, yet the bride's countryman was jilted (and the pantomime lovers were married, and set forth gayly and confidently to learn each other and the great new world they had entered at one and the same time. Another case was equally ludicrous. A Swedish maiden of somewhat fickle mind fell in love with a fellow voyager, without apprising him of the fact that she was betrothed to another man whom she was to meet at the Barge office and marry. If was her intention to hurry ashore with her new lover and outwit the former by a prior ceremony; but the red tape of the office prevented that, and the first lover came to welcome his bride. She then as promptly fell in love with Number One; but when Number Two pleaded and threatened, she could not decide which one she loved the better, so she was detained while the two men haunted the Barge office, glaring at each other. When the detention time had elapsed, the bride, still not knowing her mind, was sent unceremoniously back on the same steamer that brought her over, both jilted lovers abandoning the field in despair. But on arriving on her native soil once more, the maiden dared not face her people; so back she came, having just money enough to pay her passage and sent for Lover Number One, declaring that she loved him the better. He replied that he was very much obliged; but as he had already married a handsomer girl in the interval, he was compelled to decline to come for her. The maiden then sent word to Number Two to like effect, but he declared that he had had enough of the fickle feminine, and thus in defeat the maiden was transported back again to face the leers and jeers of her native hamlet."—(John Gilmer Speed in Ainslee's.

NEWSPAPER ARCHIVE®

THE "PARAMOUNT" MAKER.

(Special Correspondence.)

Washington, Sept. 1.—Bryan has been identified with three "paramount" issues, so which he has, with all due solemnity, dedicated his life, and pledged his powers to engraft upon the national legislation of the country.

When in the Fifty-second congress, nine years ago, he was an ardent champion of free trade, in a speech, long and brilliant, he declared that "a protective tariff was conceived in greed and nurtured in iniquity, raised in economy and the meat Khan founded principle that ever cursed this country." Yet a protective tariff bill was passed by the first congress and approved by Washington. Bryan further declared that he would fight the protective system as long as there was anything to remedy. The struggle between protection and free trade went against him. The people repudiated free trade and Bryan dropped it. It was not wise to "paramount" free trade when it would not make votes.

Four years ago, realizing that he must "paramount" something else, he took up silver and worked it with all the force of his eloquence. That in turn was repudiated by the people and dropped by Bryan. All his wild prophecies have been proven to be false by the prosperous facts of recent experience.

This year, he concluded to let free trade alone, touch lightly on free silver and "paramount" imperialism, and he is working it in the same prophet promising, reckless fashion. In opposing protection he denounced Washington, in advocating free silver he ran counter to all financial experience, in denouncing expansion he reflects on Jefferson. After a few more campaigns he may possibly get into line and strike something that is right, but at present there is a big dent in the public confidence as to the accuracy of his prophetic powers and as to his leadership ability.

As the silver crown of thorns stampeded the Chicago convention but failed to stampede the country, so the golden crown of imperialism will have no terrors for the people as long as proof of its existence depends on the assertion of the Nebraska prophet who said that the gold standard would starve everybody except the money changers and the money owners.

A study of Mr. Bryan's late speeches emphasizes the well known truth that it is easier to be critical than to be correct.

It is perhaps worth while at the present stage of political misapprehension to turn aside from assertion and look at some facts as revealed by the conduct of the United States in dealing with Puerto Rico. Sentiment is hard to weigh and difficult to appraise at its true market value, but facts are tangible evidence of intention whether they be good or bad.

The so-called imperial administration of McKinley has, according to the published statements of Puerto Ricans, relieved the inhabitants of that fair Atlantic island of the following:

Stamped paper duty on the transfer of property.

Personal certificates.

Passports.

Export duties.

Tax on professions, trades and occupations.

Import duties have been made nominal, and the Puerto Ricans have been given power to polish them altogether.

Tribute to Spain.

Tribute to the Veraguas family.

Tribute to the colonial minister.

War tribute in time of peace.

Navy tribute.

Pensions to retired Spaniards.

Support of mounted police.

Military courts for political offenders.

Mayors appointed by the government.

A military governor.

All these burdens have been lifted from the shoulders of our Puerto Ricans and in addition to these negative benefits, they have been given the following:

Habeas corpus.

Courts of justice composed of Puerto Rican magistrates.

A modern free school system.

Uniform currency.

Regularity in exchange.

Autonomous municipal rule.

Increased right of suffrage.

Native police force.

Free justice and quick procedure.

Representation in the executive council.

A house of representatives to legislate for the island.

No people were ever treated more generously, and under the new regime business has doubled in volume in two years. Burdens have been lifted, liberty has been extended, education has been advanced, business has increased, and the people are prosperous and grateful. In a short time their loyalty to the United States government will put to the blush many of those who try to blind truth by calling the best government on earth an imperial despotism.

The silver orators from Bryan down are never tired of reiterating that the gold standard is established solely in the interest of the creditor class, who want whatever is due them paid in the best and highest kind of money. They assume that the debtor class is the poor who owe money, and that the creditor class is the rich to whom money is always due. On this ground they endeavor to foment hatred and bitterness among the poor against the rich, and to array class against class and employe against employer. To stir up such jealousies and hatreds opens the road to anarchy, and anarchy leads to the destruction of government.

But it is not true that the poor are the debtor class, and the rich the creditor class. As a matter of fact the great majority of people belong to both classes, having money coming to them from one direction and having to pay it out in another. It is, therefore, difficult to draw any hard and fast line to separate the debtors from the creditors. But if there is a creditor class in this country, a set of people to whom that designation is peculiarly applicable, it is not composed of the men who handle large sums of money and who are engaged in carrying on great enterprises. They, for the most part, are debtors.

The real creditor class is composed of working men and women, of employes in every walk of business, of salaried people, and of depositors in banks, especially depositors in savings banks. These are the men and women to whom money is always due and who are entitled, if anybody in all the world is, to the best and most stable money that can be devised. A fluctuating money, varying from time to time, is to them a condemnation of poverty and loss.

A working man, no matter what his labor may be, who starts to work on Monday morning, is a creditor at nightfall for the amount of his day's wages, and at the end of the week he is a creditor for six days' pay. Whether a man works by the day, by the week, by the month, or by the year, he is always a creditor, for he must give his services first.

But above all it is the savings bank depositor who is the chief of creditors, and who in laying by his money for "a rainy day" should, when he comes to draw it out, have just as good money paid as he deposited. To these creditors who are saving day by day their hard-earned wages and salaries, Bryanism and 16 to 1 would be disaster, ruin and despair.

The most delicate constitution can safely use Ballard's Horehound Syrup. It is a sure and pleasant remedy for coughs, loss of voice, and all throat and lung troubles. Price 25 and 50 cents. Heiney, Arcularius Drug Co., 21 South Tejon street.

Where Did That Headache Go?

If there was no cure for that headache there would be some reason for tolerating it. But there is a cure. It is a sure cure. It goes right to the throbbing, tearing pain and soothes it and quiets it until in a few minutes you can straighten up and say: "Where did that headache go?" Never mind. It is gone. It will not trouble you again soon.

And then the medicine is so easy to take—no bad smell, no big capsule to swallow. It is just a little tasteless, almost, and after it is moistened it slips down your throat as easy as an oyster.

People who don't enjoy having headache ought to keep a box in the house all the time. The name? "Dunlap Headache Cure."

We sell it.

DRESSMAKING

MADAM FRASIER has just returned from the East, where she has been for time visiting the market centers and studying the new styles and trimmings. She states that she is prepared to give her patrons entire satisfaction and furnish them with ideas and effects entirely new to this western world. Her parlors are now open for the season. A corps of competent artists, who are well-known leaders in their profession, have been employed, who with their untiring efforts to please will successfully carry out all work entrusted to them.

Good Qualities of Taffeta Silks

Madcap advertisers tell of their line of popular-prices on Taffeta Silks, some of them almost delve into poetry, accenting their lustrous richness and perfect colors "etc.," but never a word do they say of their softness. Our line has all the good qualities you find in the high grade silks and would bring 90 cents yard to any retail establishment.—Our price,
